CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND

DURING

THE MIDDLE AGES.

O 62014. Wt. 22955.

CROYDON PUBLIC LIBRARIES
CENTRAL

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND

DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

On the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the proposal that each Chronicle and historical document should be edited in such a manner as to represent with all possible correctness the text of each writer, derived from a collation of the best MSS., and that no notes should be added, except such as were illustrative of the various readings. They suggested, however, that the preface to each work should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

No aid obtainable from France; sufferings in previous French wars; heavy taxes and evil counsellors; they have a remedy and can depose the King—why should he cling to evil advisers? The King gives way, and the offenders are dismissed. Michael de la Pole accused; his property confiscated. Articles of his arraignment. Council of nobles to take the oversight of the Kingdom. Their names and powers. The King swears to abide by their ordinances. Six of them constitute a council, with three officers of the King. No one to advise limiting their powers. Grants to the King. Terms of appointment of commission. Subsidy granted to King; its terms. Capture of French ships. King Richard at Leicester on his road to York to mediate between the Archbishop and the chapter. pp. 208–234.

The Earl of Arundel captures French and Flemish ships; destroys French siege works at Brest. Hugh Despenser captured and taken to Paris. Court of King's Bench at Coventry; visit of King and Queen; grants to the city. Questions put to justices about the late parliament; their reply. The King at Nottingham; the justiciaries assembled there. They are compelled to set seal to their answers. Speech of Robert Belknappe. The questions proposed and their answers. A council held at Nottingham. Harry Hotspur raises the siege of Brest. The King at Leicester. Suit at Melton Mowbray. The King returns to London; is met by mayor and citizens; slight shown to the clergy. The Duke of Gloucester's arrival near London; alarm there. Proclamation against supplying the Earl of Arundel. The three lords collect their forces, advance on London, and send messengers demanding the surrender of the King's evil favourites, who advise the King to seek aid from France. A message sent. The Governor of Calais ordered to surrender the fortress, which he declines to do. The King's party advise a fight; the Mayor is asked to provide forces; the populace refuse their aid. Answer of Basset and of Northumberland. Disturbances throughout the nation; the King is advised to send for the three nobles; he yields. The Duke of Gloucester fears the Londoners may be misled, and sends a letter to them. The letter. Messengers sent by the King to the lords. They will all do their utmost for the safety of the Kingdom. The lords agree to meet the King, who prepares to receive them in Westminster Hall. A plot suspected. Their reception; the King promises to bring the five persons accused before the next Parliament; also issues a proclamation in excuse of the lords. They are taken under the King's especial protection, and also the persons accused. Appeal of favourites to the King, and consequent delay in summoning Parliament. They take to flight, the Archbishop of York goes north, De Vere to Chester, De la Pole to Calais; he is brought back to London, but allowed by the King to depart. Steps taken to bring back the Duke of Ireland. The three lords gather their forces; fears about the action of the King. The Duke of Ireland in Oxfordshire, tries to cross Radcote Bridge, but is intercepted; swims his horse across the Thames, and so escapes. Many drowned in the marshes. Attack on the troops of the Duke. pp. 234–254.

Troops of the lords return to Oxford, thence to London. The Lord Mayor offers them the city keys. Conference with King at the Tower. He speaks favourably; consents to the arrest of the courtiers; desires the lords to remain, which the Earls of Derby and Nottingham do. Names of those who were arrested. They are placed under guard. pp. 254–257.

1387.

Names of those banished from the court. Strange appearances of fire. Quarrel at Oxford. Magic head and its predictions. pp. 257, 258.

Parliament at Westminster. Arrest of the justiciaries. The King's favourites summoned, and not appearing, outlawed. Challenge to a tournament at Calais. Increase of Wycliffites; their opinions on papal power, on confession, on images, on excommunication, on prayers to saints, on tithes, the obligation to preach, of church dignitaries. All things to be common among clergy. Opinions against musical services; oaths, Views regarding the Lord's Supper. Saints' days not to be kept. Clergy to be resident; negligent clergy to be removed. Against ecclesiastical luxury. The Lords and Commons appeal to the King against such teaching; the King enjoins the Bishops to proceed against it, also issues letters patent. The Royal Commission. Wycliffite books multiplied. They are to be seized, and their owners arrested and brought before the Commissioners. Appeal to King for a reform in Government from the Commons of the realm. Law unequally administered, taxes unfairly assessed and used. Decay of national defences; redress is asked for and remedies suggested. Justice for poor as well as rich. Honour of the Crown to be supported. Taxation ruins the nation; war expenses become unbearable. Commission asked for to carry out measures of relief. A petition from the Flemings. Demands of the English. The Flemings refuse to destroy the castle of Graveling. Serious outbreak in Flanders. Duke of Geldres does homage to the English King. Accusation brought against royal favourites. Form of the charges. Appellants have acted for the profit of King and realm. Names of the accused. Appeal made before the King at Westminster. The King meanwhile has taken the accused under his protection. Charges made. Three of accused take to flight. Chief Justice Tresilian hides but is betrayed, and summarily executed. Nicholas Brembul beheaded. Thomas Usk, John Blake, Simon Burley and others executed, but the chief men escape. They are outlawed and their property confiscated. Proceedings against the justices, who are condemned, but spared on the Queen's intercession. They are imprisoned, and injunctions laid on them. John Golofre and others pardoned. Scotch ravages; Harry Hotspur goes against them, and is taken prisoner. Episcopal promotions. Parliament at Cambridge. Subsidies for the Scotch war. Sumptuary legislation.

Statutes of the Parliament of Cambridge. Confirmation of the liberties of the church. Offices to be bestowed for desert. Restrictions on servants. Wages fixed by statute under penalties. Regulations concerning husbandry. Punishment for beggars and provision for the impotent. Statute of labourers to be enforced. Regulations concerning justices of the peace and their sessions. Punishment of those maligning peers and officers. Contributions to the expenses of Knights of Parliament. Punishment for polluting the air of towns. Measure of cloth regulated. Persons leaving the realm forfeit the King's protection. Staple removed from Middleburg to Calais. The Scotch ravage the north of England.

English enter Scotland. Discord among the Oxford students appeased by the Duke of Gloucester. Council at Westminster. The King changes the chief officers, thanks those who have been his guardians, but will now be free. Plague of flies. Truces with continental nations. pp. 309–311.

INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

A SOMEWHAT fuller account of the MSS. from which this Edition of Knighton's Chronicle is edited was promised in the brief introduction to Volume I.

Claudius E. III. (distinguished in the notes as MS, and in which Knighton's work stands third among the contents) consists of 356 folio leaves of parchment, of which the Knighton occupies from 167a to 305a, and is written in two columns. The first two leaves are blank except for titles, and the contents are:

1. Epistolæ binæ inter Johannem Archiepiscopum Lugdunensem et Radulphum de Diceto decanum Lundoniensem de Britannia non numerata inter provincias et de præeminentia ecclesiæ Lugdunensis.
2. Abbreviatio Chronicorum, sive imagines historiarum, auctore Radulpho de Diceto, decano, Lundoniensi, cui ibi agit de commendatione et mirabilibus Britanniæ, de diversis auctoribus quo tempore scripserunt, de persecutionibus ecclesiæ: de scismatibus: de conciliis: de regum unctionibus: de privilegiis Cantuariensis ecclesiæ: de quorundam Archiepiscoporum Cantuariensium electionibus: de ducibus Normannorum: de comitibus Andegavorum: de controversiis inter regnum et sacerdotium: de dissensione quæ fuit inter regem Henricum secundum et tres filios suos, &c. Sequitur et quidam appendix ad tempora Henrici tertii.[1]
3. Historia eventuum in regno Angliæ et ejus confinibus per Henricum Knighton Lecestrensem a Willelmo Conquestore ad Richardum secundum.
4. Chronica regis Henrici tertii anno regni sui quadragesimo tertio.[2]

[2] This has been used by Mr. Riley in his edition of Rishanger. See his introduction, p. xxi., and his notes passim.

5. Invictissimi Anglorum Franciæque regis Henrici quinti et ejus filii Christianissimi Henrici sexti vita per Titum Livium Ferrariensem.
6. Encomium ejusdem carmine super Episcopum Bathoniensem et Wellensem.
7. Epistola domini Roberti Grosseteste ad pontificem et cardinales contra ipsorum Non obstantias legis naturæ et scripturarum.

The other MS. Cotton. Tib. c. VII. (called A in the notes) is of 240 folios written across the whole page, and contains Knighton's Chronicle only. This was the text from which Twysden printed, but it has been sadly damaged in the fire of the Cottonian Library, so that in many places the margins and parts of the text are entirely gone.

Both MSS. are in handwriting of the XVth century, but the former looks very like a copy of the latter. The misspellings in both are very frequently the same, and not unfrequently when a word has been written on the margin in A it is incorporated in the text of MS. But the scribe of the latter has sometimes been unable to read his text, and has left at times spaces for words which he could not make out. The notes in the first thirty pages of Volume I. will supply illustrations of what is here said.

In A at the bottom of folio 3a are some Latin lines, headed Lamentum compilatoris, running thus:

Sum cæcus factus subito caligine tactus,
Non opus inceptum jam corrigo forsan ineptum.
Me metuo dubium pro veris sæpe locutum,
Plus audita loquor quam modo visa sequor.
Lector velle meum penses componere verum,
Si minus est actum de me perpendite factum
Me Deus allisit, cum vult sanare valebit,
In Domino semper stat quum relevabitur [1] æger.

The last four lines are much damaged by burning, but it happens that in the Br. Mus. MS. Add. 4793 there is a series of brief extracts (fol. 81–85) made from this manuscript of Knighton before it had been in the fire, and among them is the full text of the Lament. The extracts in question occupy 4 folios of the MS. in which they are made. They are portions of Book I. capp. 10, 13; and Book II. capp. 3, 8, 9, and three passages which the writer marks by the folios of A, viz., 43ª, 59ª, and 70ª. Then quotations are made by years, from 1285, 1317, 1332, 1346, 1355, 1361, 1362, 1364, 1386, 1387, 1394, 1395. After this last is added on the margin "The last year of Knyghton's Chronicle." The copyist of the extracts notices that the spelling of the author's name is made to be, according to the initials of the chapters, Henricus Cnitthon.

[1] var. lect. revelabitur.

Among the MSS. at Lambeth there is a copy, in a seventeenth century hand, of Book I. and a few lines of Book II. of Knighton's Chronicle. It extends over 33 pages. The MS. is No. 138, and the copying commences on page 78 with the "Lamentum Compilatoris." It is probable, therefore, that it was made from our A, but the orthography is modified. It ends at tam multis validis congredi (Book II., p. 55). It has the headline Leicestrensis Chronicon, and the title (as in A) Compilatio Henrici de Knyghton Canonici Abbathiæ Leycestrensis de eventibus Angliæ. In this copy too the spelling of the writer's name, as indicated by the capitals in Book I. was Henricus Cnitthon.

The only value of these extracts is that they supply us with the text of the "Lament." But it would seem from some corrections made by a later hand [1] on the margin of A, that there must have existed a better text than either of those here used, though such a text is not now to be found.

The text of the Chronicle is preceded by an introduction in most grandiloquent Latin, unlike almost everything[1] else in the Chronicle, in which the author gives some account of the plan of his work. He draws from the seventh book of Higden, to whose work he gives unstinted praise. His own name he inserts in the Chronicle by making each of the sixteen chapters, into which the first three books are divided, commence with letters which combined form Henricus Cnitthon. Books IV. and V. are in the form of Annals and without this division into chapters. But there is some confusion in the statement with which the Introduction closes (pp. 3, 4). It is there said that this manner of indicating the chronicler's name is adopted only in the two first books, and that the work is divided into five parts. Yet it will be seen that in Book III. the chapters are made to commence with the same sequence of letters, and the omission of this mark of the authorship is not made in parts 3 and 4, as the Introduction states, but in parts 4 and 5. It seems impossible to reconcile the words of the Introduction with the facts.[2]

[1] See notes in vol. i., pp. 23, 53, 89, 291, 346, 432, 446, and many other places.

The sixteen chapters of Book I. consist almost entirely of extracts from Higden Book VII., and of passages interspersed, the substance of which may for the most part be gathered from Higden, but which are condensations of his matter. To this form of abridging his authority Knighton alludes at the close of the book (p. 53) where he tells us that he has given his preliminary notice of the history leading up to the times of the Conqueror brevius sub tali compendiositate.

The only exception to what has just been said occurs in Chapter V., where the story of Haveloc the Dane is alluded to as a ground for the Danish claim to the English throne. This leads on to a somewhat lengthy account of Guy of Warwick and his conflict and victory over the giant Colebrand in the reign of King Athelstan.

[1] A letter from the duke of Gueldres to King Richard (vol. ii. 317) is in the same florid style. I have not found a copy of the letter anywhere else. Can it be the Chronicler's own composition?

[2] But see for suggestions below Intro. pp. xxx. and xcvii.

After the same fashion the author proceeds in Book II. till nearly the end of the XIVth chapter. The main portion of the text is from Higden, and the four additional passages of any interest are on pp. 62–66, where Knighton gives an account of the family of Robert earl of Mellent, on whom the county of Leicester had been bestowed by the king, and whose family, by their benefactions to the religious foundations of Leicester, are naturally of much interest to Knighton. On pp. 78–86 he gives the Laws of Edward the Confessor which were confirmed by William the Conqueror in the fourth year of his reign. At pp. 88–91 he enlarges on Higden's narrative by a somewhat fuller account of Archbishop Lanfranc, and similarly on pp. 110–112 he expands the notice of the death of William Rufus.

But from Chapter XV. to the end of Book II. nearly all that now stands in larger type, and which is marked repeatedly as Knighton's by the word Leycestrensis, is drawn from the Chronicle of Walter of Hemingburgh. The same remark applies to a large portion of Book III., as will be noticed in its place. But this was not discovered till both books were in type as they now stand. Otherwise a great deal more of the text would have been in small type than is so at present. This wholesale appropriation of Hemingburgh commences at Vol. I., p. 185, Cum ab iniquo rege Johanne, in which first sentence a few lines are inserted to form a link, then for a dozen pages the text is all borrowed, being pp. 238–252 of Vol. I. of Hamilton's edition of Hemingburgh. On p. 197 the passage commencing Et rex Johannes is not in Hemingburgh. But two pages later, Rex ipse Johannes, the extracts begin again and continue with very slight variations to p. 207.[1] Then commencing Iste Henricus we have a page and a half of matter from some other source, as also are the several small passages in large type down to page 225. After which all that follows down to p. 267 (occidebantur Hybernici) is extracted from the same author,[1] with only here and there a word of modification.

Thus the only matters which appear not to be borrowed are the statements (I. 197) about King John's employment of foreign troops and the establishment of the Cinque Ports, of the condition of England in the reign of Henry III. (I. 207–209) and notes (at pp. 222–223) on the battles of Evesham and Chesterfield and the surrender of Kenilworth Castle. The marginal notes that occur both in MS and A are all copied from Hemingburgh. When Hamilton in his notes on Hemingburgh (I. 247) speaks of Hemingburgh being supported by Knighton he cannot have discovered how nearly word for word the latter was a copy from the former.

A few proper names in Knighton may be collated, and in some cases corrected, from Hemingburgh. Thus for Sayncheron (p. 228, line 11) he gives Saytheron, which Mr. Hamilton identifies with St. Herie, near Taillebourg on the Charente. On p. 239, l. 22, for Stonenay he gives Scotenay ; on p. 243, l. 27, Untevilayn for Boutevilayn, and in the following line Scriby for Bribi. Similar variants are Pilvesdon for Pilnesdon (p. 246), Hestelee for Henstelet, and Mandevile for Maundeble, at the top of p. 255. A more important reading is Palestrinam, i.e., the ancient Præneste, for Palestinam at the foot of p. 264. But in most of these places Mr. Hamilton records in his notes readings similar or nearly so to those of the Knighton MSS.

On the unintelligible passage noticed on p. 262 it is worth while to give Hemingburgh's text, which is: "et "erat ille nuncius de Alte nutritis qui nec mortem timent "nec Deum reverentur," though Alte is no easier to explain than Alto. Rishanger's explanation sub terra is only a guess. Another variation (p. 265) is, instead of vinum

[1] cf. Hemingburgh i. 289–341.

Libaninum Hemingburgh gives vinum libaminum, which is probably correct, though the former is intelligible. The allusion is to Deut. xxxii. 38, "De "quorum victimis comedebant adipes et bibebant vinum "libaminum."

On p. 203 Knighton corrects the Hemingburgh text, which makes King Henry to be crowned Londoniis, whereas the coronation took place at Gloucester, Westminster being at that time in the possession of the French. On the next page, at the beginning of Chap. XVI., in order to introduce the N, the final letter of his name, Knighton sets down Nunc statim amici novi regis, where the text he copied from had Moxque consiliarii n.r.

From this examination of the text of Book II. it will be seen that out of the 214 pages of which it consists there are not more than a score which do not belong either to Higden or to Hemingburgh. Beside the matters already mentioned as not derived from these authors, it remains to enumerate the few other scattered sentences in the book which appear to be taken from some other source. The language is so utterly unlike the grandiloquent introduction to Book I. that it seems hardly possible to think that it is Knighton's own. These are a notice how the monastery at Waltham was converted into an abbey of canons regular (p. 56); the existence of Harold's tomb at Waltham (p. 57). On the same page is an account of a voice heard by William of Normandy on the night after his landing; and on the next some mention of those who came over with him, and how the King of Denmark made a demand for homage, the refusal of which may have led to the subsequent Danish invasion. At page 67 the notice of the wars between William and Malcolm King of Scotland is but an abridgement of the narrative of Hemingburgh. At p. 103 is a story about one who prayed for the dead, which is not found elsewhere; at p. 128 are a few words concerning Henry I.; at p. 130 a story about St. Patrick's purgatory; at p. 147 is a notice of the religious foundations of Robert, Earl of Leicester, where Knighton may be drawing from sources in the house to which he belonged. At the close of the reigns of Stephen and Henry II. there are short accounts of the character of these Kings, and in the midst of long extracts from Higden concerning Richard I. there are a few scattered sentences from some other authority marked constantly as Leycestrensis.

Turning to Book III. (Vol. I., pp. 269–479) we find it to be largely of the same character. For from p. 291 to p. 398 (i.e. from the beginning of Chap. III. to the end of Chap. XII.) nearly all that is not marked as Higden's is copied from Hemingburgh. And after examining carefully the places where the illuminated letters occur, which in this book also are made to form Knighton's name, I am inclined to think that the breaks in the book were here made by the scribe in imitation of what the author himself has done in Books I. and II. This supposition helps, in part, to make intelligible Knighton's words (Vol. I., pp. 3, 4.) about his own arrangement of the books. In eleven out of the sixteen places where the illuminated letters of the proper name are found in Book III. no mark of a chapter is given in either MS. The scribe appears therefore to have amused himself by searching for sentences at convenient intervals where the proper letter occurred in the opening word, and to have left these letters of the acrostic to be illuminated by another hand, as was usually done. At the seventh break, where the V of Henricus ought to have been displayed the illuminator seems to have thought he was one letter farther on in the name, for instead of Videns, both MSS. give Sidens.

Book III. begins on p. 269, and the direct copying from Hemingburgh (as has been said) on p. 291. The matter of these intervening pages is however in the main drawn by way of abridgement from the same writer. In the note on the family of Henry III., p. 269, Knighton adds the name of Katherine, who died unmarried, to the ordinary lists of the children of the King. He gives no events of the two years after the death of Henry, but commences, as Hemingburgh also does, with the coronation of Edward I. in 1274, after his arrival from the Holy Land. The account which he gives of the feats and festivities of the coronation is different from the other records of that day's events. In close conjunction he notices briefly the King's desire for reforms and the passing of the first statutes of Westminster.

But when we come to the next events chronicled, the council of Lyons, the Gregorian constitutions, the earthquake, the blood-like rain, and the murrain among sheep in 1274, we see both by the order of events, and from the similarity of expressions, that we are reading a condensation of Hemingburgh. After this a short quotation from Higden is inserted, and then in language which does not resemble any of the other chronicles is noted the Welsh rebellion of 1276 and its suppression in the next year, though the words, which say of Llewellyn that voluit se maritare sine licentia regis, leave the reader ignorant of the details to which they allude. The next three clauses claimed for Knighton are a notice, out of place, of Edward's return from the Holy Land, of the dedication of Leicester Abbey in 1279, and of Edward's partiality for David the Welsh King's brother.

The narrative of the Welsh rebellion in 1282 (pp. 274–277) is substantially the same as Hemingburgh with the exception that Knighton ascribes the prompting of the war to David and not to Llewellyn. The details in Hemingburgh are much more full, especially about the varying fortunes of the English in the campaign.

The next nine pages, 278–286, are given as if nearly all by Knighton, and are occupied with the starting of the King to Gascony in 1285; then mention is made of troubles at home from Rees ap Meredith, of Edward's reception and stay for three years in Gascony; of the corrupt conduct of some English judges at this time, among whom, beside Thomas de Weland, Knighton gives the names of Adam de Stretton and Richard de Boyland; next is noticed the punishment of Jews for clipping coin, and the grants which were made to the King for war expenses.

Chapter II. opens with the disturbances which befel in 1288 at Boston in Lincolnshire, then comes a notice of the condemnation of heretical opinions (classed under eight heads) in the Court of Arches. This last passage seems to be entirely independent. The intention of Edward to go to the Holy Land, which was encouraged by successive Popes, but prevented by the death of Alexander King of Scotland, is next narrated, and followed by an account, of a very brief character, of the death of the heiress of Scotland, Margaret of Norway, and the various claimants to the crown, and how at the parliament of Norham they all agreed to submit their claims to the decision of the King of England and to abide by his judgment; the short narrative closing with the election of John Baliol, and his homage done to Edward at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1292.

In substance the whole of these nine pages are to be found in Hemingburgh (II. pp. 11–39) though not precisely in the same order and words, though at times the language is somewhat close. It is difficult to suppose, after what we have seen in Book II. and shall presently see in this book, that the compiler of Knighton has not here adapted the chronicle, which he has laid under such large contributions elsewhere. This idea will be greatly confirmed if the parts of pp. 289 and 290, which are marked as "Leycestrensis," and contain the story of the revolt of Madoc and Morgan in Wales with its suppression in 1295, be compared with Hemingburgh, Vol. II. pp. 57–59.

Chapter III. commences in the middle of p. 291 and Chapter XII. ends on p. 399, and the comparison of the following table with the printed text will make it clear that, with the exception of a few tags to make the narrative readable, all that is not derived from Higden in these chapters, is either copied or adapted from Hemingburgh.

It is at once clear from a comparison of this list with the printed text that up to the end of Chapter XII. all that is not taken by Knighton from Higden is copied or adapted from Hemingburgh, the change of order made in Hemingburgh's material being due to a desire to make the narrative of Scotch affairs more continuous, and to range the events of continental history all into one narrative.

In Book III., as in the previous book, several proper names have been found in Hemingburgh with a different spelling. These have been inserted in brackets in the Index Nominum at the end of Volume II. The name which (p. 345) is not given in either MS. of Knighton is set down as Bayon in Hemingburgh.

On p. 350 Knighton intimates that he is copying from some authority, though he does not name it, only saying quære eodem libro capitulo 3.

At pp. 388, 389 he mentions the name of Gisborne, after the account of the fighting in Annandale, as the place at which the church was burnt, Hemingburgh speaks of it as ecclesia nostra, as was natural for him who was canon of Gisborne.

The reading Oxoniæ on pp. 433, 434 should be Exoniæ. But both MSS. have the word clearly written, and Twysden printed Oxoniæ. But it is manifestly a mistake. The same error occurs in the text of the Chron. Angliæ, p. 15, under the year 1343.

On p. 398 it is difficult to see why Knighton makes the note which he places at the close of the extract there given from the Ordinance of Pope Boniface about the differences between the kings of England and France. He represents himself as having diligently sought for the remainder of the document, but been unable to find it. The Papal award is given entire in Hemingburgh, II. 161–170.

From the commencement of Chapter XIII. Knighton ceases to incorporate Hemingburgh, though it is plain that in the period from 1299–1315 (where a gap of 12 years occurs in Hemingburgh) he still draws on the earlier authority, but abridges what he finds there.

In 1299[1] he only slightly mentions the peace between France and England, of which Hemingburgh gives the full conditions. Knighton corrects the mistake which is made under this year by Hemingburgh, who (Vol. II., p. 185) gives London as the place of King Edward's marriage. The marriage took place at Canterbury on Sept. 12th. The other events of the year which he notices are the parliaments held at York[2] and the march to Berwick with a view to the relief of Stirling Castle a purpose which was abandoned on account of the cold weather; and the death of Henry of Newark, archbishop of York, who was succeeded by Thomas Corbridge.

Under 1300 the first event mentioned is the Papal jubilee, which observance was at this time first instituted; the King's march into Scotland, and the truce agreed upon till Whitsuntide 1301, and the birth of the King's eldest son Thomas of Brotherton, afterwards earl of Norfolk. The confirmation of the Forest Charter, which took place in this year, Knighton only mentions under the following year, and gives Stamford (p. 401) as the place where the Parliament was held for the confirmation. Stamford is an error for Westminster, the confusion has arisen because in 1301 in a Parliament at the former place an arrangement was made for the perambulation of the forests (cf. Hemingburgh, II. 188).

In 1301 was born Edmund of Woodstock, afterwards earl of Kent, and here Knighton has set down the claim made by Pope Boniface that Scotland should be made a fief of the Holy See. This claim belongs to the events of 1300. For the Parliament held at Lincoln to consider the Pope's demand was assembled on Jan. 20th, 1301. The reply given by the whole baronage was emphatically against the Papal claim. After the close of the parliament the King marched into Scotland in June, and stayed there there till after Christmas. After this in the early part (January 26) of 1302 he concluded a short truce and came home again. He had appointed Sir John Segrave guardian of Scotland. Knighton makes the barest allusion to the differences between the Pope and the King of France and between the same king and the count of Flanders. But in 1303 there was another rebellion of the Scots, under Wallace (whom Hemingburgh does not mention in connexion with this outbreak), and at this time Sir John Segrave was defeated. In consequence Edward himself went up to Scotland and extended his uninterrupted march through the land as far as Caithness, and on his way back Stirling Castle was surrendered to him. In the same year Philip of France restored Gascony to King Edward. But of these events, and of the accusations made against Pope Boniface, and of the proceedings which brought about the Pope's death, Knighton makes but the briefest mention.

[1] It is curious that the mistake of the MSS. of Knighton about this date, which they give as 1290, occurs also in the Eulogium Historiarum, p. 170.

It was in 1304 that Scotland became so much subdued that the king could leave Sir John Segrave again in charge. And in the same year the Justiciaries of the King's Bench and the Exchequer were restored to London, having been for seven years in the northern capital at York.

The events noted under 1305 are the expulsion of the Flemings from England at the request of the French King, and the capture and execution of William Wallace. In the account of the latter, the meaning of the words ductus apud Conderet[1] et suspensus, is difficult to see. In the Eulog. Hist. Wallace is said to have been

[1] Perhaps Conderet is a scribe's blunder for Londonias.

" seductus per unum de armigeris suis juxta villam " Sancti Dominici."[1] By this is meant Sir John Menteith, who was governor of Dumbarton. Wallace was taken prisoner at Robroystown (sometimes written Robrastoun), in the neighbourhood of Glasgow, and his execution was in London. Under 1306 all that Knighton records is the murder of John Comyn, with the subsequent sending of an English army against Bruce and his escape to Cantyre. The movements against Bruce also are nearly all that Knighton mentions for 1307, except the espousal of Prince Edward with Isabella the daughter of the French King, and the death of Edward I. at Burgh-upon-Sands. With a mention of the recall of Piers Gaveston, and the imprisonment of the Bishop of Chester for his efforts against the Prince's favourite, the chapter closes, its contents being merely the heads of the history which is given at greater length in Hemingburgh, II. pp. 185–273, with the exception of the proceedings against the Bishop of Chester, of which Hemingburgh makes no mention.

In the next two chapters (XIV., XV.) the incidents not drawn from Higden are very few. For the Chronicle of Hemingburgh has no records between 1315 and 1327. In the events selected for notice Knighton seems to follow Trokelowe and Murimuth. But all is given in very scanty fashion. Thus he records the commencement in 1307 of proceedings against the Knights Templars, and alludes to the council held concerning them in London in 1311, but of the wider movement against the Order by the King of France and the Pope there is no mention.

The story of Edward's infatuation for Gaveston is taken from Higden, and in all the accounts of the dissensions between the King and the nobles led by Thomas earl of Leicester, there is no original matter, with the exception of certain articles (pp. 413–421) which form a part of the agreement between the Earl of Leicester and those prelates who were sent to bring about a reconciliation between him and the King. The events which preceded the defeat, capture, and execution of the earl of Leicester afford no addition to Trokelowe, except in the matter of reflections (pp. 426-427) on the evil fate which dogged those who had a hand in the earl of Leicester's overthrow.

The rest of the story of the reign of Edward II. adds nothing to what is told by either Murimuth or Trokelowe and Blaneforde, in greater detail, except the name of the agent in Mortimer's escape from the Tower, which is given as Gerard de Alspaye, and the arraignment of Hugh Despenser, which is given in extenso, pp. 437–441.

Chapter XV. concludes with a note, apparently not by Knighton, marking this point as the end of Higden's chronicle, but noting that there were some additions made thereto in connexion with the reign of Edward III., and that from these quotations have been made in what follows. The termination of Higden proper will be seen to be here by reference to Vol. VIII., p. 324, of the Polychronicon as published in the Rolls Series, where Explicit Historia marks the conclusion, but is followed immediately by a short notice of events of importance down to the 26th year of Edward III. The allusion in Knighton is to these.

With chapter XVI. (p. 443) of Book III. Knighton's narrative becomes more independent, and his matter consequently more deserving of consideration. He gives the day [1] of Edward III.'s coronation as the first of February, and mentions, what is quite true, that that day was a Sunday. He also discusses how it came to pass that there was a variation in the date given. The surrender by the son of the younger of the Despensers of the Welsh possessions which came to him from his uncle, and the plundering of the abbey of Abingdon, are mentioned only by Knighton.

In the account (p. 444) of the imprisonment of Edward II. he mentions Thomas de Berkeleye as one of the persons put in charge of him, whereas Murimuth gives Thomas de Gorney. The mistake in Knighton may be due to the fact that Berkeley Castle was the place of the King's last imprisonment. A slip of the scribe may well be the cause of the insertion of the wrong name.

That Edward treated for peace with the Scots at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and the reason why his endeavours were in vain, is not mentioned in the contemporary accounts, while Knighton has some details of his own (p. 445) about the conflict between the English and the Hainaulters at York. He relates the adventure of Sir James Douglas in the camp of the English, which Hemingburgh also mentions, but the two stories differ considerably, while Knighton alone mentions the sorrow of King Edward at the ill success of this his first expedition.

The Parliament held at Lincoln, at which the death of Edward II. was made known, is not mentioned by Hemingburgh or Murimuth, nor the details of the subsidy asked at the queen-mother's advice from the clergy (p. 446), nor do they mention the return of the troops to Hainault, laden with gifts from the queen and Mortimer. Knighton next adds to the details of King Edward's marriage that the princess Philippa came to England on Christmas eve, and that the royal marriage was celebrated at York, and that subsidies were granted to the king at the instance of Henry earl of Lancaster.

The parliament, which Knighton (p. 447) says met at York and concluded peace with Scotland, was really at Northampton in 1328, and arranged the marriage between David Bruce and Johanna the king's sister, who is named de Turri from her birthplace, the Tower of London.

The narrative of the usurpation of power by the Queen-mother and Mortimer is in accord with Hemingburgh, and so is the account of the opposition offered by Henry earl of Lancaster, and its frustration by the desertion of the most influential of his party, the uncles of the King, the earls of Norfolk and Kent, but Knighton gives more of detail, and there are many touches which show that we are reading the account of one who lived amid the events. Besides Mortimer's round table (p. 449) we have the story of the death of Sir Robert Holand, who had played false to Thomas the late earl of Lancaster, and the account of the ravages committed by the queen's party round about Leicester, with all which doings Knighton must have been well acquainted. The names of those concerned in the earl of Lancaster's effort at resistance, and the result both to him and them, are mentioned in the manner of one to whom the events were familiar (p. 450).

To the account of the homage done by Edward to the French King for Gascony, Knighton adds (p. 451) the story of the attempt that was devised for arresting the English monarch, and its discovery and frustration by the Bishop of Lincoln, who was attending on Edward. And his notice of the death of Robert Bruce is enlarged by a mention of the ill he wrought for England, and how want of good rule had brought it about that two Englishmen were at this time hardly a match for a weak Scotchman (p. 452).

Under 1330 there is considerable detail given about the arrest and execution of Edmund earl of Kent, the King's uncle, and about other arbitrary proceedings which led to the great unpopularity of Isabella and Mortimer, so that in a council at Nottingham it was resolved to arrest them. This was effected in the night time, and with them were taken also Mortimer's two sons and Oliver de Byngam[1] and Simon de Berford. One of the king's servants, Hugh de Tryplington,[2] was slain by Mortimer before he was taken. After her arrest the queen was confined to one place of residence, deprived of her lands, and allowed 3,000 marks a year for her support (p. 454).

In the narrative of this year Knighton differs from Murimuth in his estimate of the character of the earl of Kent. The latter relates that he was not much regretted,[3] while Knighton tells how an executioner for him could hardly be found "propter pietatem quam habebant de eo" (p. 452). The articles of accusation against Mortimer are given almost in full by Knighton (pp. 454–458). He was sentenced by the Parliament of Westminster on 26 November (Monday) and executed on the following Thursday. His follower and adviser, Simon de Berford, was executed by the sentence of the same parliament.

At this point (p. 459) Knighton inserts a passage from Higden, containing an abstract of the movements of Edward Baliol to recover the Scottish crown, but later on he gives in his own words the details of the several conflicts, occupying with them nearly all the rest of the chapter.

Before this, however, he tells (p. 460) of the erection of a new hostel at Leicester by Henry, Earl of Lancaster, and of certain foreign wars between Christians and infidels, in the course of which the adventurous Scotchman Sir James Douglas came by his death. Knighton tells too how terrible this hero had made himself to the English invaders of Scotland.

In 1331 he mentions a court of Trailbaston, held through all England, and how in consequence of the severities thereof a judge was seized by one of the sufferers and made to pay ransom. The parliament of 1332 took these proceedings into consideration, and a sentence of excommunication was also pronounced by the Archbishop and bishops against those who had taken part in this assault upon a justiciary.

Mention is made at the same time of the birth of a daughter of King Edward, and the marriage of his sister Eleanor to the duke of Gueldres (p. 461).

After this Knighton enters on his own fuller account of the various expeditions made into Scotland. He tells us that the movement began from the complaints of English nobles because they had lost their Scotch possessions. He gives a list of these claimants, and foremost stands Edward Baliol, who laid claim to the Scottish kingdom. The list is more full than those given by Hemingburgh and Murimuth. They landed at Kinghorn (p. 462) in Fifeshire, and routed the Scotch forces which came against them. Next day they marched to the Abbey of Dunfermline, where they waited for the enemy to attack them. A battle was fought on the eve of St. Lawrence [August 10] at Glaidsmuir[1] where the Scotch were defeated with great slaughter. In all the notices of this victory there is a record that it was gained not by numbers but divina clementia mediante, or some similiar expression referring the result to the help of God. Knighton, in agreement with Hemingburgh, mentions (p. 463) the 40 mounted "Alemanni" who had come to help the English, but he gives a more complete list of those nobles who fell on the Scotch side, and mentions by name two English nobles, who fell, viz., Lord John Gurdon and Lord Reginald de la Beche. Next day the English (p. 464) took St. Johnstown, (i.e. Perth) and fortified it. Here there came against them a large force led by Patrick and Archibald Douglas, who sent to Berwick for a seaman named John Crabbe with some Flemish ships to attempt the destruction of the English shipping in the Tay. Here Knighton adheres very closely to the substance, not the words, of Hemingburgh, and relates the story of the defeat of the Scots both by water and land, and how Perth was given into the charge of the Earl of Fife, and Edward Baliol crowned King at Scone (p. 465). The Scotch asking for a truce, that they might consider how peace might be made, treacherously began to attack Baliol's adherents, and he was forced to flee to England. He was well received by Sir Ralph de Acre in Carlisle, and later on was helped much by the Lady de Geynes at Morholme (p. 466). The latter incidents are all peculiar to Knighton. After the English Parliament of 1333, held at York, the English nobles take up the cause of Baliol and march on Scotland and ultimately lay siege to Berwick. Meanwhile Archibald Douglas ravages North England about Gilsland, and Englishmen retaliate upon Scotland and take prisoner William Douglas and many others. Further raids were made about Haddington. Knighton alone tells the story of the earl of Ulster's (p. 467) intention to go to the help of the English at Berwick, and how he was murdered by some one who favoured the Scots. He also alone records the statute settling the place of the staple of wool and the price at which it should be sold.

Hemingburgh is followed in the account of the attempt of the Scots to raise the siege of Berwick (pp. 468, 469) and of their defeat in the Battle of Halidown Hill, but the lists of names are much more fully given in Knighton, who tells of the surrender of Berwick, and the terms granted to the besieged, and of Edward Baliol's return to Scotland.

In 1334 Knighton tells us that it was at the Parliament at York that Baliol did homage to Edward for his Scotch possessions. Murimuth mentions that Baliol was summoned to this Parliament, but did homage at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The latter part of this statement is in Hemingburgh, who does not say anything about the Parliament of York. Returning to Scotland, Baliol finds the country in arms against him under the leadership of the earl of Athol, and he is obliged to go back again to Berwick (p. 471) while some of his supporters are imprisoned. After the autumn gathering of a Parliament in London, King Edward marches to Berwick and onward to the Firth of Forth, to help Baliol, at which time Edward de Bohun, a kinsman of the King, is drowned in the Solway. With English help Roxburgh is fortified. The English King returns to Newcastle-upon-Tyne in the beginning of February to receive some messengers from the King of France, who had espoused the cause of the Scots, and after a council held at Nottingham Edward declines to make peace with both France and the Scots (p. 472).

Several matters of this year relative to Pope John XXII., to a quarrel among the students in the University of Oxford, and to the severity of the winter of this year, are only mentioned by Knighton.

In 1385 Knighton gives the history of the Scotch campaign in a different form from the other records. According to him Edward advanced from Carlisle and crossed the Solway. A plundering party, at the head of which was earl Montague, went in the direction of Caerlaverock and brought back much booty. The march of the army was through Annandale, and King Edward conferred signal honours on Lord Montague (p. 473). A fortress belonging to the Earl of Athol is taken by Baliol and Earl Warenne; and in the place were found several persons of importance. The English army came to Perth, and there several of the Scotch magnates made submission to the English monarch. Hemingburgh mentions the earl of Athol among the number. Knighton only says that those who submitted had authority from the earl of Athol to do so, and that they made terms in his name, which terms he gives at full (pp. 473–475).

These persons, now liegemen of Baliol and King Edward, were sent northward to check rebellion, but their submission was not popular, and the earl of Athol was presently slain near Kildrummie Castle, while the earl of Moray and the Douglases attacked some troops who were returning to England. At the same time some Scots advanced toward Bamborough, where the queen was, but they were stopped by English troops, and the Earl of Moray taken prisoner, and the attempt thus made to draw the English King from Scotland did not succeed.

The King of France, who sided with David Bruce, obtained the agency of the Pope to bring about peace, and to engage King Edward in a proposed Crusade. The English King answered that his hands were full through the French King's policy in aiding the Scotch rebels ; and to David Bruce he sent an answer to the same purport (p. 476).

Knighton naturally notices in 1335 the burning of Cockerham manor and chapel with its books and muniments as being a possession of Leicester Abbey. In this year the Scots proposed to submit to England, and David Bruce and his wife were to reside in England till the death of Edward Baliol. But through the interference of the King of France, they held back and did not present themselves at the Parliament at the appointed time (p. 477).

In consequence, the English King passed again into Scotland in 1336, and strengthened the fortifications of Perth, and also the fortresses of Stirling, Roxburgh, and Bothwell. The King's brother, John of Eltham, died at Perth at this time. Edward is said to have made this expedition because troops from France were expected in Scotland, but after much marching and plundering, meeting with no resistance, he came back, and at Nottingham a new grant of subsidies was liberally made to him. There are several matters here mentioned which are supplementary to Hemingburgh, while his account of the expedition of 1336, though differing, can be worked in with all that Knighton records.

Under 1337 he only gives (p. 478) a list of honours conferred by King Edward, Hemingburgh says six earls were created. Knighton gives the same list, but adds to them Hugh Courtenay, made earl of Devonshire.

It will be seen from this sketch of the subjects of Chapter XVI. that we have now entered upon a different kind of material, and one which is of much interest, and which adds largely to the story of our country's history.

Knighton, or the scribe, adds that now the whole matter of Higden is worked out, and the Leicester Chronicler proceeds alone for the rest of the book.

Knighton opens Book IV. with a notice of King Edward's embassy relative to his claims in Gascony. This was unsuccessful,[1] the French King being enraged about the events in the Scotch War. A desire for retaliation led the French to ravage Gascony. King Edward's claim in England to the pre-emption of wool is mentioned by Murimuth, who also speaks (p. 79) of a previous statute forbidding the export of English wool, but providing for free[2] admission of foreign artisans to make it up. This, he says, was followed by certain sumptuary laws, which the chronicler tells us were never observed. According to Knighton, Edward employed the wool in sale abroad to gain him foreign support which the prohibition of its export had alienated.[3] He laments, in common with other contemporaries, the cost of the visit to England of the two cardinals[1] who came to mediate between France and England.

In the notice of the siege of Dunbar he gives the name of the Earl of Arundel as one of those entrusted with that unsuccessful effort. The incident of the capture of the Bishop of Glasgow when bringing over supplies from France to Scotland is told with somewhat more detail in Hemingburgh, who does not however supply the name of the captor, Sir John Ros, and while Knighton says the bishop died of grief, Hemingburgh says he was fatally knocked on the head.

The foreign ecclesiastics whose property was confiscated are said to have been Cluniac and Cistercian monks. But there seems to have been unusual efforts made to raise money from every class, and Edward having received large subsidies felt himself able to send to the Pope a refusal[2] of the French King's proposals. In consequence, the Normans made a descent on Portsmouth, and set the town on fire. Knighton adds to the records, that they were able to do this because they wore the arms of Englishmen and so deceived the inhabitants.

He opens the year 1338 with Edward's further exactions for war expenses, and records the popular discontent thereat, which he says the King appeased by adopting wise counsel. But before the war was actually declared there had been sent[3] from England, along with the cardinals, the Archbishop of Canterbury (John Stratford), and the Bishop of Durham (Richard de Bury) to try for peace "si posset fieri bono modo". At the same time the siege of Dunbar had been raised, and Edward sent agents[1] before him to the continent to make ready for his own crossing. He set forth on the day of the Translation of St. Thomas, with a large retinue, among whom Knighton mentions the Earl of Norfolk where Hemingburgh sets down the Earl of Northampton, and came safely to Antwerp.[2]

In the King's absence, a parliament was held by commission at Northampton, by the duke of Cornwall, and liberal grants were made again for the war service. Knighton makes special mention of the wool which went to the King from the three counties of Leicester, Lincoln, and Northampton, viz., 1211 sacks.[3] The statement which he makes, that on his arrival, Edward found that there was only the duke of Gueldres on whom he could rely, finds explanation from Murimuth, who mentions that the allies whom he had looked for, asked at the outset a large sum of money for expenses, more than the royal treasury could afford.

From Antwerp Edward hastened to have a meeting, at Coblenz,[4] with the duke of Bavaria, who had made himself Emperor of Germany, and was living not far from Cologne. About their meeting Knighton preserves an elaborate account, of which we have nothing elsewhere. The narrative of the ceremonial might have come from an eye-witness, so minute is it in numbers and detail. The Emperor named[5] the King his Vicarius, and in the Cathedral at Cologne there was much taking of oaths, and liberal promises made to Edward of aid in his war with France. Which all came to very little. After this the king returned to Brabant, and called a council at Malines, to which all the magnates gathered except the bishop of Liége ; who also declined to attend a second council held in his near neighbourhood. Of this conduct Edward complained to the Emperor, who promised to come to his help.

The Flemings at this time banished the Count of Flanders and put most of his kindred to death.[1]

That no efforts might be spared to obtain peace the two prelates, who had been sent at the opening of the year to negotiate, made visits to two French parliaments, one held at Compiègne, the other at Arras. But the King of France had in secret made accord with the Emperor,[2] and instead of peace he sent a fleet to do all the harm they could on the coast of England. In their first attack they burnt a great part of Southampton, and came again later in the year to complete the devastation, but were prevented from landing anywhere. A curious offer and challenge was made to them by the English, but not accepted. The Parliament took steps for making the Cinque Ports secure, and also the Coasts of Norfolk and Suffolk, in expectation of the descents of the French. Knighton preserves a record of the price of grain and pulse in this year. The events of next year (1339), shew that the precautions for guarding the seaboard were very necessary. For Hastings was partly burnt down, and attacks were made on Sandwich and Rye[3] ;

[1] Of all these doings we have no notice in contemporary records.

[2] Knighton (p. 22) next mentions the Emperor in 1340 as appealing to Edward on behalf of the French King.

[3] Murimuth gives (pp. 88–89) evidence of the activity of the French in this matter, telling that attacks were made also on Harwich, Southampton, the Isle of Wight, Dover, Folkestone, Plymouth, Bristol, and the coasts of Devonshire and Cornwall, where they were resisted by the aged Hugh Courtenay, Earl of Devon. Cf. also Galfr. le Baker, p. 63.

the French at the same time inciting the Scots to make inroads from the north, and themselves invading Gascony. The English retaliated by setting fire to Boulogne.

King Edward began his march into France, leaving William de Pole as a hostage at Antwerp. At the same time Sir Walter Manny made an independent raid in the direction of Picardy. Edward's first halt was at Valenciennes,[1] thence he went forward and entered French territory on Tuesday 21st September. The English admiral Sir Robert Morley was at the same time busy ravaging the coast of Normandy. The King went forward, devastating [2] and burning on every side, through Cambresis, then to Markonne, and was led to expect that King Philip would meet him near Peronne. Therefore in that direction he made his way, crossing the Oise, and then waiting for what might happen. At this time his allies, the duke of Brabant, the marquis of Juliers, and the duke of Gueldres began to complain of scarcity of provisions, and of the cold weather. From the boastful tone of the French King, they had expected to find him in a short time, and had come out scantily provided. By a letter [3] from the master of the French crossbowmen the English were assured that if they chose a fit place for the fight, they would be met in battle. Hence Edward on the Friday (Sept. 24) advanced to Flamengerie, but he and his troops waited all the next day to no purpose. Then he sent to offer battle on the Sunday, but the French took fright and retired, and on the Monday the allies of the English King went back into Brabant, he and his men going to Antwerp.

The nobles of Gascony who had taken the French King's part returned to their allegiance to Edward, and a navy, which had gathered on the coast of Flanders with a view to descents on England, was scattered by a storm soon after setting sail. Thus their threats came to nought. Knighton takes notice of the scanty[1] number of English troops which were with Edward in Flanders, and states that it was at the suggestion[2] of the Flemings that he assumed the arms of France.[3] They then did homage to him, and the queen remained at Ghent,[4] where John of Gaunt was born at this time, while her husband returned to England and held a parliament in London after Eastertide in 1340.

For the year[5] 1340 Knighton begins his record with an account of the liberal grants made to King Edward by the unanimous voice of Parliament, although an appeal had been made by some of the nobles that the grant should be of a less abundant character. In consequence of this liberality many easements were bestowed by the King, of which Knighton's notice is not so full as are some of the other accounts.[6] He, however, mentions the care taken that no one departing from the kingdom should go till he had given security that his share of the customs should be paid.

The activity of the French King during Edward's absence in England, and his preparations for intercepting him as he crossed to Ghent, are noticed, as well as his instigation of the Scots to give trouble, and his own invasion of Flanders, during which he made prisoners at Lisle of the Earls of Salisbury and Suffolk, whom Edward had left in charge there. The Flemings sent word to England that unless speedy help came they must surrender to the French. Hence Edward set forth with all possible dispatch,[1] attended by the Bishop of Lincoln (Burgwash) and several of the nobility, and, on the eve of St. John the Baptist, arrived on the coast of Flanders. There he found the French fleet waiting for him in full force, and next day was fought the decisive battle of Sluys,[2] in which Knighton says the French lost 25,000 men. He tells us also the names of two of the French commanders.

Edward with the Flemings proceeded to besiege Tournay.[3] It was thought the French King would attempt to raise the siege, but the Countess of Hainault on her knees begged for a peace, and the Duke of Brabant also came forward as a mediator. Thus a truce for a year was concluded of which Knighton records the terms, though not quite so fully as Avesbury. Probably Edward was the more inclined to this course, because his supplies from England came in with much uncertainty.[4]

[1] The English King sailed from Orwell on 22nd June 1340. Murimuth says (p. 105) that he kept his Whitsuntide at Ipswich. There was clearly some trouble in getting the fleet together, and the ships were few in number (see Hemingb., p. 355). Murimuth says there were 260 vessels large and small in the French fleet, and Knighton's numbers are nearly the same.

[2] The details of the engagement are given with some fulness by Hemingb., who says the Flemings watched the battle prepared to join whichever side should win. He also gives the text of King Edward's letter ordering a public thanksgiving in England for the victory. Avesbury has the letter also (p. 312). Murimuth has more detail concerning the battle (p. 106), and enumerates the losses on both sides. In Eul. Hist. the battle is said to have lasted from 9 in the morning till sunrise the next day. The Chron. Angl. has a curious story of how the defeat was announced to the French King by the court jester.

[3] Murimuth mentions the siege of St. Omer as going on at the same time with Tournay, and that the latter lasted till 27th Sept. Avesbury (p. 316) has a long list of the other English conquests in this interval.

[4] Murim. says he was expectans pecuniam de Anglia quæ non venit.

The Emperor, too, who with so much parade had made Edward his Vicar is now reconciled to France, and uses his intercession also. We can easily understand the annoyance of King Edward at this change of face, and can see why the title of Vicarius was soon afterwards[1] withdrawn. Knighton makes no mention of Edward's challenge[2] of the French King to single combat, but records the inroad of the Scots under David Bruce, which extended as far as Durham. Knighton is alone in mentioning a grievous sickness which prevailed throughout England at this time, but specially in Leicestershire. The sufferers are said by him to have barked like dogs.

Of the troubles of 1341 between the King and Archbishop Stratford in connexion with the exaction of taxes from the clergy other than had been conceded, Knighton has no word. The King after desisting from the siege of Tournay, suddenly returned to England, and no doubt grieved at the remissness which had been shown in sending him supplies, removed all his ministers who were clerics,[3] and put laymen in their place. He also removed many of the judges and other official persons, and no doubt the zeal of the newly appointed officers was somewhat excessive. Hence the troubles. Knighton mentions King Edward's visit to Scotland, which was

[1] The letter of Louis, the Emperor, revoking the title is in Hemingb. (ii. 388) and in Avesbury (p. 336). The revocation was made in 1341.

[2] The challenge and King Philip's reply are in Hemingb., p. 361–2, and Murim. (pp. 110–114).

[3] Hemingburgh has given the text of the Archbishop's remonstrance, which brought on him the royal displeasure; also of a letter which he wrote to the new Lord Chancellor on the exactions made upon the clergy; and of another letter to the King and Council about the seizure and imprisonment of some of the Clergy; and to the Bishop of London directing him to oppose the levying of these taxes in his diocese. The Archbishop also published an excommunication on the infringers of the Church's liberty, which document Walsingham (i. 240) says was sent to all the Bishops. A commission was appointed to deal with the Archbishop, but at the intervention of the bishops and nobles peace was made. The thread of the story can be best gathered from Murimuth.

really made because of the return of David Bruce from France. Edward spent Christmas of 1341 at Melrose, and tournaments[1] between Scots and English were held both there and at Berwick. Knighton tells here also of difficulties between David and the Scots, of which we have no notice in the other chronicles.

The death[2] of Benedict XII., and the election of Clement VI., who had been Bishop of Rouen, took place this year.

Knighton, like Murimuth, tells of two expeditions[3] sent in 1342 into Brittany, one under Sir Walter Manny, the other under the Earl of Northampton, before Edward crossed to Brest just before All Saints day. But Knighton is the fuller in both cases of detail both about places and the persons concerned. It was in consequence of news of the straits[4] of the English in the second expedition that Edward sailed from Portsmouth to Brest, which he reached on October 30th. Matters had become more settled[5] between the King and the Archbishop before his sailing, and on his arrival at Brest he rested a while, during which his scouts were exploring in preparation for future movements. They brought a report which led to the resolve to attack Vannes. In the meantime the Earl of Northampton reduced Rohan and some other places, and in consequence of these successes[6] several towns surrendered to King Edward. The meditated assault on Vannes was interrupted by the arrival of mediators from the Pope, through whose intervention a truce[7] was concluded for three years, and the King returned to England.

[1] On these tournaments Murimuth (p. 123) has a fuller notice.

[2] He died 25th April 1342.

[3] These were undertaken on behalf of the Duchess of Brittany against Charles of Blois, who claimed the dukedom.

[4] Murimuth (p. 127) tells us that the English were victorious.

[5] After a council held in St. Paul's, Oct. 19, 1341.

[6] Avesbury (p. 340) gives a letter of King Edward to his son, recounting these successes.

[7] This was on Jan. 19th, 1343. Murimuth gives the text of the treaty (p. 129) as does Avesbury (p. 344).

Edward experienced severe storms before he reached England,[1] and Knighton says he met the Spanish fleet, and they were about to attack him until they learned who he was. This is not mentioned by any one else. He also is alone in his notice of an earthquake in England in this year (Feb. 1343).

Henry, Earl of Derby, who had been helping the Spaniards at the siege of Algesira,[2] came back to England towards the close of the year, and was presently employed to arrange a truce between England and Scotland.

The French King puts to a cruel death such of the nobles of Brittany as had sided with the English.

In this year the large demands made by the Holy See roused both King and people. Their message[3] to the Pope was that the nation would bear such burdens no longer. Ecclesiastics holding English benefices must either come and reside or be deprived. The King issued a royal mandate[4] to this effect in all the counties of England, and the nobles were at one with him, and made their opposition to Papal provisions for their benefices. The Pope was alarmed, and gave up his demands; but it was no doubt in consequence of what had happened in England, that he secretly bestowed his influence on the side of the French.[5] Of these important movements Knighton gives the barest notice.

[1] Murimuth (p. 135) tells how the various parts of the English fleet were scattered, and that the King made a pilgrimage to Canterbury, Gloucester, and Walsingham after reaching England. Avesbury (p. 352) mentions the storm.

[2] Chron. Angl. (p. 16); Wals. (i. 262). But neither notices the Earl of Derby.

[3] The document is given in French in full, Mur. (p. 138), Avesb. (353), and in Latin, Hemin. (ii. p. 403), which latter also gives the letter of the Barons to the Pope (p. 401).

[4] The text of the letter to the sheriffs is in Heming. (p. 411).

[5] Negotiations for peace between England and France were proceeding all this time. Heming. (p. 407) gives the text of the Commission of the English Ambassadors sent to Rome to have the Pope's judgment about Edward's claim to France. The envoys (Chron. Angl., p. 15) were Henry, Earl of Derby, Hugh le Spenser, Ralph Stafford, with the Bp. of Exeter and others. The papal decision is given by Murim. (p. 148) on three grounds.

In 1344, Henry, Earl of Derby goes to France, for Charles of Blois was invading Brittany. This is a matter of interest for Knighton, as is also the murder of a clerk at Leicester, who was, it may be noted, a married man. The year was a fruitful one, and the Parliament gave the King liberal aids to be used for the good [1] of the realm, and to send an army against the Scots. Knighton notices the new coinage. In accordance with the wish of the nation a force under Edward Baliol was sent to protect the Scotch marches.

A tournament [2] at Leicester, on the marriage of Matilda, daughter of the Earl of Derby, is noted by Knighton, who turns aside here to give an account of the family of Gilbert, Earl of Gloucester.

The Pope sends a message that Edward shall cease to wear the arms of France, shall not disturb any ecclesiastics who have been appointed by provision from Rome, and makes a large demand for money. The bearers of the message are sent away with a short answer.

The Duke of Brittany, who had been the French King's prisoner, escapes some time after Easter and comes to England.

The events [3] which Knighton records for 1345 are the two expeditions, first of the Earl of Northampton, along with the Duke of Brittany (John of Montfort) into Brittany. Towards the end of the year John of Montfort died. The second expedition was of Henry, Earl of [1] Murim. (p. 156) is severe on the way in which royal promises at such times are frequently forgotten.

[2] Tournaments appear to have been the order of the day. Murim. mentions joustings at Windsor (p. 155), at Hereford (p. 159).

[3] Mur. (pp. 160 seqq.) makes mention of several interchanges of communication between England and the papal court in the early part of this year, in which the demands of Rome were in no wise abated, and in the end the English envoys leave Rome suddenly, and soon after (p. 165) comes a declaration from Edward that the French King has broken the truce. Edward crosses to Flanders but soon returns to Sandwich (26th July). Later on come other communications from the Pope, which Murimuth (p. 188) says, show the partiality of the Pope for the French. Henry, Earl of Derby had been engaged in these communications. See Mur. (p. 158).

Derby into Gascony, where he was very successful, seizing much treasure[1] at Bergerac, and many distinguished captives at Auberoche.[2] During his absence news comes of the death of his father, the Earl of Lancaster, at Leicester, and by this he becomes himself Earl of Lancaster. The Count of Hainault was killed at this time by the people of Friesland.

Knighton's narrative for 1346, after the mention of the levies and preparation of war supplies, proceeds at once to the embarkation[3] of the King for Normandy, which took place on 11th July. In the meantime the English[4] on the northern marches enter Scotland but soon agree to a truce, while the Scots in retaliation devastate the English country round about Carlisle.

The landing at La Hogue (13th July) and the advance, after the capture of Barflete, through Valognes, Carentan, St. Lo, and the march on Caen are briefly noticed.[5] Caen was soon taken and many prisoners, some of much distinction. The English are said to have lost but one man. Knighton notices some disturbances in Liége, in which many are said to have been killed.

The Flemings enter France to support the English movements. The prisoners, to the number of 300 or more, taken at Caen, are lodged in the Tower of London. Had not the English crossed to France, the French king meditated a descent on England.

From Caen[6] the English troops advanced with much trouble as near to Paris as Poissy, but on the French

[2] Other towns which submitted at this time are mentioned in Avesbnry (p. 356).

[3] He sailed from Portsmouth.

[4] Murim. (p. 189) says the King himself went to the north country. Heming. (ii. 420) gives a letter from the King of France inciting David Bruce to invade England.

[5] Much more is said in Murimuth (pp. 200 seqq.) who preserves four letters describing the events to the capture of Caen, and another (p. 215) relating the story of the campaign from that point to the victory at Cressy. A part of these letters is given in Avesbury.

[6] Eul. Hist. (p. 209) mentions a letter sent to Edward by the French King at this time, but does not gives its contents.

taking a northward direction towards Amiens, the English pursued and were forced, because the bridges were all destroyed, to pass in fording the Somme through a marshy spot between Abbeville and Le Crotoy,[1] before thought impassable, and so came to Cressy,[2] where a most decisive battle was fought (26th Aug. 1346) in which the French King was wounded [3] in the face and fled. From Cressy [4] the English marched towards Calais, ravaging several places on the way, while the Earl of Warwick turned aside to do the same at Terouanne, but joined the main army again at Calais, the siege of which was now begun and lasted till the 4th of August in the next year.

This success of the English won many to their side, and to this there was added in the meantime the raising of the siege of Aiguillon [5] in Aquitaine, which John, the son of the French King, was attacking, and which Henry (now Earl of Lancaster) was able to relieve, and afterwards to reduce some other places [6] in Saintogne, which Knighton mentions under the history of 1347.

Knighton says that it was after the battle of Cressy that Philip incited the Scots [7] to invade England, which they did in great force, expecting to find no resistance, but they were defeated [8] at Nevil's Cross (17th Oct.), and Knighton

[1] Crotoy was taken by Hugh de Spencer (Chr. Angl. 22).

[2] Hemingb. (ii. 423) gives letters interchanged between the Kings of France and England a few days before the eve of Cressy (Aug. 14 and 15). These were proposing and accepting arrangements for a battle on a field not far from Paris.

[4] A letter preserved by Murim. (p. 217) makes out the English losses at Cressy to have been very trifling, and Galf. le Baker (p. 85) says non quadraginta de toto exercitu regis.

[5] Avesbury (p. 372) preserves a letter of the Earl of Lancaster describing this campaign.

[6] Murim. (p. 217) gives a list of places which in this time submitted to the English.

[7] There had been an unsuccessful inroad under William Douglas in 1345 (Chr. Ang. 21).

gives a long list of distinguished[1] persons who were taken prisoners, while King David[2] was taken at Merrington and kept in Bamborough Castle till next year, when he was transferred to the Tower of London (2nd Jan. 1347).

In the events of 1347 there are many details given by Knighton, of which there is no notice in the other contemporary chronicles. Such are the accounts of Edward's refusal to allow any prisoners taken at Nevile's Cross to be ransomed, and of the plundering of Scotland by the English immediately after the victory, in which proceeding he makes special mention of priests and people at Beverley and York as eminently active. He alone tells of the Irish rising prompted by the French and Scots, and of the aids granted to the King of England both now and at later period of the year (p. 52). Of the latter he speaks from personal knowledge of what had been taken from Leicester Abbey and similar foundations.

In the report of the campaign of the Earl of Lancaster in Aquitaine, down to the taking of Poitiers, Knighton has something in common with the Chron. Angl., and partly with Walsingham, only that Knighton's story implies some treacherous dealing from within at Poitiers while Walsingham[3] speaks of an ordinary capture by storm.

After this follow several incidents peculiar to Knighton. The doings at David Bruce's coming to London[4]; the storm-tossed return of Henry, Earl of Lancaster; the death of Eustace de Folville; the execution of the Earls of Menteith and Fife; the introduction of some supplies

[1] Almost the whole army of Scotland was captured or destroyed (Chr. Angl. 24). Knighton's list is the fullest record we have.

[2] With the battle of Neville's Cross Murimuth's Chronicle terminates. He tells us that the reason why David was not sent to London at once was because he had received two wounds on the head.

[3] Wals. i. 271, civitatem potenter cepit per insultum.

into Calais by the French, which was rendered impossible for the future; the movements of Baliol into Scotland with the support of the English, though there are some recalled to go to Calais.

Next come events noticed elsewhere; the approach of John,[1] the son of the French King, towards Calais, but not near enough for any engagement. Knighton (p. 48) makes mention of a repetition of this conduct by Prince John, of which no other record appears. Some French ships bringing supplies to Calais are captured,[2] and a letter is intercepted from the captain of Calais to the French King, telling of their sad condition in the besieged city. This King Edward causes to be forwarded to Philip. The expulsion of certain citizens from Calais, and the refusal of the English to receive them is recorded by Knighton only.

While giving, in respect of the prisoners[3] taken in Brittany by Sir Thomas Dagworth, more particulars than are found elsewhere, Knighton is not so full as Avesbury on the history. But he is alone in telling of the sally of Henry Earl of Lancaster into the surrounding country while the army of England lay before Calais; from which he was recalled by the rumour that the French King was coming near.

The sending of two cardinals[4] with conditions from Philip, and the other proposals which they made, fit in [1] Avesbury (p. 384), says it was at Cassel, on the borders of Flanders, that John showed himself, and was driven off by the Flemings. He gives 8 June as the date.

[2] The account of this capture, and the letter in full, is given in Avesbury, p. 384-386.

[3] Charles of Blois was among these prisoners. Avesb. dates his capture 20th June, and gives Dagworth's letter describing the victory. The Chron. Ang. (pp. 24–26) makes a double mention of Dagworth's prowess, and calls the second aliud bellum. It was in the latter that Charles was taken prisoner. Dagworth is praised as alter Machabeus.

[4] Avesb. (p. 390) calls them Ambaldus episcopus Tusculanus et Stephanus presbyter cardinalis, and places their coming at the end of July. The same ecclesiastics are named in the letters of Jan. 15, alluded to in a previous note. They are parties in the treaty after the surrender of Calais (Avesb. 396).

with Avesbury, but are supplementary to his narrative. When the negotiations failed a battle was expected, but the French King withdrew, burning his tents and the supplies which he could not carry away. Hence Calais surrenders, and Knighton gives some details of the submissive manner in which the representatives both of the army and the burgesses came before Edward.[1] This was on Aug. 3rd, and Knighton (p. 53) mentions that there was great suffering for a whole month in the English army from the heat and want of water. Troops were sent from Flanders[2] to help the English at this time, and the prince of Wales committed great ravages in France and brought the spoils to Calais.

Of the subsidies asked for from the abbeys and priories by the King at this time Knighton has personal knowledge, and tells what was paid in wool from Leicester and from Derby. But the demand was general; and the merchants too were summoned and taxed according to their means.

Knighton reports a misadventure of the Earl of Warwick and his troops at St. Omer: tells how the treasures of Calais were gathered and safeguarded; how prisoners were sent to the Tower of London from Calais; how a fire broke out in Calais and caused much destruction, but the tent of the King escaped; how in consequence it became necessary to send for supplies from England, where there was for a short time a dearth of corn. Troops were left for the guardianship of Calais.

Nor does he omit to mention the magnificence of his hero, Henry of Lancaster, who spent large amounts of his own wealth in addition to his allowance from King Edward.

[1] In Eul. Hist. (p. 212) it is mentioned that the truce after the surrender of Calais was for nine months. Avesbury (pp. 396–402) gives the full text of the treaty, which is dated 28th Sept.

[2] Avesb. (p. 383) tells of the endeavours of Philip before this to win over the Flemings, but they refused his proposals.

In the return of the English, they suffered great losses [1] at sea. Knighton closes the year with a notice of the Parliament summoned after the Epiphany; of the efforts made by the Pope to secure a candidate of his own (the son of the King of Bohemia, who was killed at Cressy) to be chosen emperor, while the nobles of the empire invited Edward to accept the honour. The price of wine and the prevalence of spurious coin (Lushburne)[2] are the entries with which the year's chronicle ends.

For 1348 and 1349 Knighton is largely an independent authority. He first makes mention of the subsidies for the year; then of the marriage of Princess Joanna to the son of the King of Spain; then follows the notice of Charles of Blois' imprisonment in the Tower, and a register of the number of captives and slain in the war in Brittany. At the Pope's request a truce for three years was granted, on which followed a series of tournaments, in which the prisoners from France took part. A further notice is given of the offer of the empire to King Edward, and his discovery that this was done to divert his attention from his claim to France. Hence his utter refusal.

The Scots were anxious to redeem King David, and when their request was refused, proceeded to ravage the borderlands and to kill and take prisoners. This caused a challenge to a tournament from Berwick, and after the tournament, in which the Scots had the worst, the English made reprisals and ravaged the county [3] of Carrick.

The French marauders, called Gentes sine capite, invade Gascony but are repulsed by the English governor.

[1] These are noted in Eul. Hist. (p. 213) and in Chron. Angl. (p. 25), which both record Edward's appeal to the Virgin Mary. The later vaguely dates the return about Michaelmas. It was on Oct. 12th.

[2] The name is a corruption of Luxemburg, from which place this coinage was said to be brought in.

[3] The southern part of Ayrshire.

The King's son Thomas, of Windsor, was born this year. It was at this period that a complaint arose about the presence of ladies at tournaments, a custom which led to great extravagances and excesses. Knighton sees God's hand in the heavy rains which put a stop to these encounters. Incidentally he mentions the payment of those cardinals who had been intermediaries in the truce negotiations at Calais, and of a papal grant of sixpence in the mark to the Bishop of Lincoln from the clerical incomes of his diocese.

Then follows the account of "the Black Death"; of its origin in India,[1] and its progress westward; of its influence on the heathen people in turning their thoughts for a time to Christianity. Knighton tells specially of mortality in the monasteries of France. The plague came to England in the autumn of 1348, and earthquakes happened at some places on the continent at this time, causing much destruction.

The Pope became urgent for peace, and negotiations were begun by sending the Earl of Lancaster, and the Earl of Norfolk to Calais,[2] but an outbreak among the Flemings, who attacked the people of Bruges for siding with the English, put an end to peaceful thoughts. Edward would have gone over to chastise these rebels, but was prevented by information which the Earl of [1] Avesbury (p. 406) say the plague appeared in England, near Dorchester, about the beginning of August 1348 and ceased about Michaelmas 1349. He notes the mortality in London. The Chron. Angl. (p. 26) connects the plague with the previous rainy season, and speaks of the number who died in the monastery of St. Alban's. He says the whole Moorish people had their thoughts turned to Christianity, not (as Knighton) the King of Tharsis only. The Eul. Hist. mentions Melcombe in Dorset as the place where it first appeared in England, and notices specially its ravages at Bristol. This record places the duration of the disease at two years and more. Knighton (p. 59) makes its duration about a year.

[2] There was an attempt made to recover Calais, of which Knighton makes no mention, which shows how weak the hold of the English was thought to be. See Chron. Angl. (p. 27), Avesbury (p. 408).

Lancaster gave him. A truce, however, was agreed on for a time.

There was a great mortality in the English ports, and Knighton records the number of deaths in Leicester. In consequence of the difficulty of visiting the sick a general remission was proclaimed for those dying of the plague. The evil extended to the flocks;[1] all things fell in price, there were none to look after the crops, so that wages rose, and the affliction was so terrible that 'By the foul death of England' became a common[2] Scottish oath. The disease had the effect of checking invasion from Scotland. But out of it came a lack of clergy, and unqualified candidates began to seek ordination. The difficulty about wages became so great that legislation on the subject was deemed necessary. For men refused to work for the usual rates, and their refusal was punished by fine and imprisonment. The effects of the plague were disastrous: for houses fell into decay, there were no servants to be had for farm labour, provisions increased in price, a remission of rents became general, and the services legally due from tenants attached to the soil lapsed; and as a consequence came dearth.

The general absolution which the Pope offered would have drawn pilgrims to Rome, but the King forbad their going, and in consequence received a message from the Holy See, the tenor[3] of which and the King's reply show that there was much friction between the King and the Pope at this season.

The Earl of Lancaster was at this time ravaging in France, and specially the country about Toulouse. The Spaniards had with their fleet made a descent in Esthonia, and in returning attacked ships belonging to England.

[1] Knighton gives an interesting price list (p. 62) and another of wages (p. 63).

[3] Besides being urged to permit pilgrimages, Edward was asked to check the Earl of Lancaster's campaign in Aquitaine, and not to interfere with papal provisions to benefices.

In consequence, the English fleet went against them, and in an engagement[1] off Winchelsea conquered and destroyed many of them, and brought spoils to England. The victory was gained on Sunday, Aug. 14, 1350.

The other events which Knighton chronicles in 1350 are the papal Jubilee, with which, in other records,[2] is connected the coming of the Flagellants into England; next that Henry Earl of Lancaster was advanced to the rank[3] of Duke of Lancaster, and that, on the death of his father, Prince John was crowned[4] King of France. His next notice, after the grant of subsidies, is of the death[5] of the brave Sir Thomas Dagworth, which he includes among the events of 1351. Then, after another mention of subsidies, he speaks of the taking of Guisnes[6] but mentions this again subsequently as it belongs to Jan. 1352. Similarly he mentions here the betrothal, and next year the marriage, of Matilda, the daughter of the Duke of Lancaster, to William Duke of Zealand. The Duke of Lancaster in this year commits great ravages in the north of France, and his conduct is emulated by John de Beauchamp, Captain of Calais. But after a truce had been made with the French the restless duke passes over into Prussia, and is there arrested and made to pay a ransom.

In 1352 is noted the mission of King David Bruce from the Tower, that, if possible, he might arrange terms between Scotland and England. In this he failed, the Scots being willing to redeem their King, but not to become liegemen of England. So he came back to his prison. Next [1] follows a curious episode in the adventures of the roving Henry of Lancaster. Being in Cologne he is informed that the Duke of Brunswick intends to capture him. On learning this he is very angry, which when the Duke of Brunswick hears of, he sends to England a challenge to single combat, which the Duke of Lancaster at once accepts, and passes over to Calais and thence to Paris, being received with much honour in France. Attempts are made to bring about a reconciliation, but in vain. When however the combatants are in the lists, the Duke of Brunswick in fear makes submission. Lancaster prefers to engage in the combat, but, after his opponent has been thoroughly humiliated, he forgoes this. A long list of his friends is given by Knighton, and we are told how all that the triumphant duke would accept from the French King was a thorn from our Lord's crown. He returned to England and found the King keeping Christmas at St. Albans, by whom he was much congratulated. The next events noted are the death of Pope Clement VI., the drought [2] and stormy weather, and the valiant conduct of Walter de Bentley at the battle of Mauron.[3] Then is mentioned a statute of labourers, which must refer to some modification of the previous law, which was certain to prove unworkable.[4]

[1] Briefly noticed in Chron. Ang. (p. 32) as being in 1354.

[2] In Chron. Angl. (p. 31) the drought is mentioned in 1353 as lasting from March to July, and adds that the Duke of Zealand sent several shiploads of corn to England to relieve the necessity.

[3] The battle of Mauron was fought on Aug. 14th, 1352, and Avesb. (p. 416) has preserved a letter of Sir Walter giving an account of the engagement and of the slain and the prisoners.

[4] Knighton speaks of this legislation with disfavour, and so does, even more fully, Chron. Ang. (p. 30). It was all ad communium detrimentum.

The Duke of Lancaster bounteously grants land for a park for Leicester abbey, and bestows on that foundation the livings of Humberton and Hungerton, himself settling matters with the Pope about the presentations. The staple of wool was established in London[1] to the great advantage of the royal revenue.

Knighton opens the year 1353 with a notice of some resistance at Chester to the circuit of the judges, to check which the presence was needed of the Prince of Wales and others of the nobles. A fine was paid to the Prince of Wales by the offenders, and in a subsequent court of Trailbaston the judges appear to have inflicted penalties with great severity. A second note is made of David Bruce's vain endeavour to bring about terms between England and Scotland, and (p. 76) the names are recorded of some who were to accompany him in his mission. The gift of 500 marks by the Prince of Wales to the Abbey of Dieulacres was thought to be as a tithe of what had been exacted from Chester. An expedition to Gascony, and a commission sent to Calais for the discussion of terms of peace are mentioned, as well as the laudation which was given to England by the Count d' Eu, for the kindness he had received as a prisoner there which brought suspicion upon him in his own country and he was seized and put to death. There is a notice of the severe winter and of a tournament between 20 French and 20 Gascons, in which the latter had the better.

The circumstances connected with the ransom of Charles of Blois are the only part of this year's events found in the other contemporary chronicles, and here Knighton is not so full as Avesbury.[2] He gives no

[1] Avesbury (p. 419) says that the staple was set up not only at Westminster but in other places. Wals. (p. 278) names Canterbury, Chichester, Bristol, Lincoln, and Hull, as does Chr. Ang. under 1354.

[2] Avesb. (p. 418) says that the terms of Charles' ransom were agreed on, and a son of his was to marry a daughter of the English king, and Charles to be confirmed in the dukedom of Brittany, which all came to nought.

intimation that the islet which Charles seized was held by Englishmen.

In 1354, the creation of Roger Mortimer as Earl of March; the claims of the Earl of Warwick to lands in Wales; the truce between England and France; and the sending of envoys, among which Henry of Lancaster was principal, to Avignon, where the Pope was resident, to discuss terms of peace, which in the end come to nought,[1] are the first events noticed. And here Knighton turns aside to glorify the Duke of Lancaster, on whom honours of every kind were heaped at Avignon, though an attempt was made to arrest him as he was on his way home.

Under this year is entered the birth[2] of the King's son Thomas of Woodstock, afterwards Earl of Gloucester.

In 1355 the French King sent a force to aid the Scots, and after Easter the Prince of Wales is sent[3] over with an army to Gascony, where (p. 84) he is everywhere peaceably and honourably received. After relating a portent of two standards contending in the sky, Knighton tells of King Edward's passage to the Norman coast, where he learns that the King of Navarre[4] is being won over to the side of France. In Ireland the Scots and Irish invaded the Englishry, and the Scots at the same time prepared to enter England from the border, but

[1] The English had agreed to the terms (Avesb. 420) that England should possess Aquitaine without doing homage to the French king for it, and that Edward should give up his claim on France. These terms the French refused.

[2] In honour of his birth the King made a great feast and a tournament at Woodstock on the first Sunday in Lent (Avesb. 422).

[3] He only sailed on Septr. 8th from Plymouth (Chron. Angl. p. 33, Avesb. p. 424). A letter of the Prince containing an account of his progress after his arrival in Gascony is given by Avesb., p. 434, followed by two other letters of Sir John Wingfield describing the same operations. They are all dated about Christmastide.

[4] The King of Navarre had been negotiating before for help from England against France. This had been promised and was about to come when he changed sides. (Avesb. 426).

concluded a truce when they found the English prepared to fight.

King Edward was at Calais in Michaelmas, and the King of France with the help of Navarre proposed to come against him there. At this period Knighton mentions the prevalence of a terrible mental malady, and also relates the trial and burning of some Minorite [1] Friars in the Papal dominions for declaring John XXII. to have been a heretic. This was because of certain decrees of his against the Franciscan order.

Edward marched [2] to meet King John, who retired to Paris and the English returned to Calais. Here they learnt that Berwick had been taken [3] by the Scots, so the King hastened back, first going up to Newcastle, then to Berwick. Upon his arrival the enemy surrender (Jan. 24th) Edward Baliol resigns [4] his claim to the crown of Scotland. Edward marches forward into the country, first to Roxburgh, then to Edinburgh, Sir William Douglas refuses to submit, and on this account the King laid waste a large district. But the Scots had, in withdrawing, carried all provisions [5] away, so the English were compelled to retire. The King, however, tarried at Melrose with a few troops, while some Englishmen who tried to get back to England were [6] captured by Douglas in Ettrick forest.

[3] The castle of Berwick was still in English hands (Avesb. p. 431) (Chron. Ang. p. 34).

[4] The resignation was made at Roxburgh (Chr. Ang. p. 34). The act of resignation is given in full (Avesb. 451).

[5] The English victualling ships were dispersed by stormy weather (Avesb. p. 455).

[6] In Avesb. (p. 456) we learn that the party was of 20 men under Sir Robert Herle. Cf. Chr. Ang. (p. 34) which does not mention the locality.

Beginning the year 1356 with a notice of the subsidies asked by the King from the clergy, which were not granted[1] to the full, Knighton tells of the expedition of the Duke of Lancaster into Normandy. In the account of this circular tour he leans upon the journal[2] of the duke which is given in Avesbury. The French King who had retired before the force of Lancaster, now goes against the Prince of Wales, who starting from Bordeaux[3] had ravaged a large district of France, and had arrived in the neighbourhood of Poitiers. Overtures for peace had been made, but refused[4] by the French King, and supplies were running short among the English. It was therefore a necessity to fight, and the battle was joined on the 19th of September. The French King had given orders to spare no one but the Prince of Wales. However, largely by the bravery of the Earl of Warwick, the victory was gained by the army of England, with the great glory of the capture of the French King and his son. Knighton gives a list of prisoners and slain which is clearly from the same[5] source as that in Avesbury. The fortress of Romorentyn had been reduced the fifteenth day before the battle, and the list of captives there made is added to the others as well as a notice of some persons taken on the Saturday previous to the battle. The English army moves towards Bordeaux.[6] The army of the French had been nearly double that of the English.

[4] This refusal is Knighton's account (p. 88), the other authorities tell of the appeals of the Cardinal of Perigord and others to Prince Edward, and represent the refusal as his (Eul. Hist. pp. 221, 223, Chron. Ang. p. 35).

[6] The Prince of Wales arrived at Bordeaux on Sunday Oct. 2nd (Eul. Hist. p. 226).

The ever-active Henry of Lancaster, that he may do something in the winter time, lays siege to Rennes.[1] The Pope begins to be instant about mediation.

In 1357, the Prince of Wales brings his royal prisoner to London where a grand reception is made on the Tuesday before Whitsunday, and a grant of revenue is made to the King. King John was lodged at Windsor the other royal prisoner, David Bruce, being kept at the Tower.

Knighton next makes brief mention of the case the Bishop of Armagh against the Friars Minor, but gives no details, except that the Pope, to whom appeal was made, was always on the side of the French.

An appeal is made to King Edward to withdraw the Duke of Lancaster from Rennes, but before the King's message reached him the town had surrendered, the hope of help, which appeared to be coming from Charles of Blois, having failed. The duke, however, never entered Rennes. While these matters were proceeding, certain cardinals[2] arrived in London to treat for a general peace.

At this time some of the soldiers left in Gascony and Brittany gathered together and seized the town of Honfleur, and were helped to keep possession against the Marshal of Flanders by Robert Knolles and his company.

A matter of dispute about roads which arose between the abbat of Leicester and the people of Belgrave is included in Knighton's record. It was settled in favour of the abbey.

The King[3] of Scotland is set free, and a truce made with Scotland for ten years.

[2] Chron. Angl. (p. 37) gives the names Talirandus episcopus Albanensis et Nicholaus tituli Sancti Vitalis.

[3] Chron. Angl. (p. 37) mentions Odiham Castle as the place of his confinement. The ransom was to be paid in the course of 10 years.

A notice of the sums demanded from England by the Cardinals[1] and of the Papal claim for the grant of tribute made to Rome in the days of King[2] John, which the English King refuses, brings the year's record to a close.

In 1358 Edward invited foreigners to a tournament at the feast of St. George,[3] to which many came, and when it was over negotiations went on so far that a treaty was agreed on for the ransom[4] of the French King.

The year is made notorious by the ravages of marauding companies in various parts of France, in which the men led by Robert Knolles[5] were most conspicuous. They advanced upon Paris, burnt Orleans, and terrified the Pope and his court in Avignon.[6] In the end Robert Knolles placed all he had taken at the service of King Edward.

Other events noted are, the return of the cardinals; the death of King Edward's mother[7]; the friendly attitude of the Scotch King towards England, for which he offers to join in the war, and with which he makes terms of friendship.

When the terms of peace with France were sent for ratification to the Pope, it was found that the King of France had no thought of abiding by them. Hence he and his son also were placed under stricter custody. The messengers to the papal court returned with news of the delight which the prospect of peace had given at Avignon.

[2] The Eul. Hist. (p. 239) mentions this demand as made by Urban V. in 1366, and refused by the English parliament.

[3] It was at Windsor 23rd April 1358 (Eul. Hist., p. 227).

[4] Chron. Angl. p. 38 states the ransom at 600,000 florins. On p. 44 it is put at three million florins. The demand for hostages as security was refused by the French.

At the same time they brought the Pope's absolution for some of the judges who at the instance of the Bishop of Ely had been excommunicated. This causes Knighton to mention the quarrel between that prelate and Lady Wake, which caused much trouble at this time. This lady, who was connected [1] with the blood royal, had charged the bishop with some encroachment on her property which adjoined his, and with being accessory to the burning of a farmhouse of hers. The judges decided in favour of Lady Wake. The King gave leave for a new trial. But in the meantime one of the Bishop's men had killed a servant of Lady Wake's. The Bishop was unfortunate in this, and had also, it appears, spoken of the partiality of the Court. He found himself in such evil plight, and circumstances so much against him, that at last he fled to Avignon, and the Pope issued a sentence of excommunication against his judges. It was the revocation of this sentence which led Knighton to mention some details of the history.[2]

Outbreaks on the part of the people of Paris and the Flemings put an end to the prospect of peace with France, and foreigners were expelled from England.

King Edward in 1359 prepares to cross into France. Before this could be done, Sir Walter Manny [3] and his party seized on Calais and expelled (ejecerunt) the English. As Edward could not go at once, Henry of Lan-

[1] She was a daughter of Henry, Earl of Lancaster, which is a reason for Knighton's notice of her.

[2] Other features of the history will be found in Chron. Angl., p. 39.

[3] This must be the meaning of Knighton's text. The explanation must be what is told us in Froissart that the multitude of mercenary Germans, Bohemians, Brabanters, Flemings, and Hainaulters (the last coming with Sir Walter Manny) filled every part of the town, so that there was no room for the English, and even if the King had arrived they would not have known where to lodge him (Johnes' Froissart, i. ch. 203.)

caster[1] is sent over and does much mischief throughout Picardy and Artois. After a time the King arrives,[2] and together they advance without much misadventure to Rheims,[3] which opened to them, and the duke, with others, went forward to attack Cernay. The English gain the walls and enter the town, and in like manner capture several other places in that district.

The French meantime gather in Normandy for an attack on England, but part of their expedition is met by Sir Thomas Fogges and much of it captured. They did, however, attack Winchelsea,[4] with much brutality, but were in the end driven away. Knighton notices, as though it might be a consequence of this, that the French King was now confined in the Tower.

In 1360 a supreme effort was made by the English against France; there was a general levy; the bishops offered indulgences to those who would go to the war; and those who were not able to go were to give of their means. The navy, when ready, went to Boulogne first, then to Honfleur, while King Edward went by way of Rheims and Chalons into Burgundy, and toward Paris,[5] where matters were settled with the duke. First the suburbs[6] of Paris were burnt; then a challenge brought out 60 soldiers to fight half the number of English. The duke of Lancaster is stationed near Orleans, and disputes between the parties of England and France go on in Gascony; and the English losses are not a few; so negotiations for peace are not unwelcome.[7]

Here Knighton remembers Leicester; how the King this year made certain grants to the town at the instance of Henry of Lancaster, and how the abbat recovered a manor and a church, of which one John of Arden was striving to deprive the Abbey.

The King of France is allowed to cross to Calais for peace negotiations,[1] and the famous peace of Bretigny is at last concluded, and kings and nobles pledged themselves to observe its terms.

The next year is saddened for Knighton by the death of his noble Duke Henry,[2] who died and was buried at Leicester, the abbey of which owed so much to his liberality. Fitzralph the Archbishop of Armagh also died at this time. France was suffering from the ravages of marauding [3] bands, who, in Savoy, went to the length of sacking the capital.

Matilda, Duchess of Zealand, claims the inheritance which was hers from her father, but dies next year, and it was suggested she was poisoned, that there might be no disruption of the Lancastrian possessions. The Prince of Wales was married to Joan of Kent.

The year was marked by a severe storm and much mortality,[4] in which eleven of the canons of Leicester abbey died.

In 1362 Knighton only notices a court of Trailbaston at York and the death of John de Coupeland, the captor of David Bruce.

Next year the settling [5] of the wool staple at Calais; the crossing of the Prince of Wales into Gascony; [6] and the obtaining of many privileges for Leicester abbey, which were confirmed by Richard II., make up the chief part of the year's record. To which is added that four[1] Kings were at this time in London, on whose account, it would seem, the King made a grand hunting party in Sherwood Forest and other places. The Duchess of Clarence and Edward Baliol died this year, which was also remarkable for a severe frost[2] and in 1364 the French king died in the Savoy. Knighton is alone in the mention of a large amount of silver and arms prepared by this King to be sent into France, of which he made confession before his death.

The year was noted for many cases of sacrilege, and also for the death[3] of Charles of Blois, and the capture of Bertrand du Guesclin.[4]

In 1365 there is noticed only the marriage of the King's daughter, Princess Isabella, and the punishment of certain judges who had been corrupted.

Next year Nicholas Dagworth with his company had a successful encounter with a French force in Anjou. The Prince of Wales and John of Gaunt go to the help of Peter the Cruel. They win the battle of Najara[5] in Castile, but lose the greatest part of their forces through disease. The defeated Bastard Henry of Spain made his way into Gascony before the Prince of Wales could get back again, and did much harm. Then he returned to Spain and murdered[6] the King. Knighton alludes here to the claim to the Spanish throne made subsequently by John of Gaunt. He closes the year with a notice of the marauding bands in France; of the marriage and sudden death of the Duke of Clarence;[1] and of the passage of Prince Edmund into Gascony to help the Black Prince.

Between Books IV. and V. there is a gap[2] of ten years, the latter opening (p. 124) with a simple mention of the date of the death[3] and burial of Edward III., on which follows a short account of the Black Prince, praising his character and achievements which made him worthy to be named among kings.

After mentioning the date (16th July, 1377) of Richard IInd's coronation[4] and whom he married, the Chronicler turns to give a long notice of Abbat William Clowne[5] of Leicester, who died Jan. 22nd 1377. He had been a most influential head of the house, and had gained for it many privileges and possessions.

A brief notice of the election[6] of Pope Urban VI. comes next, with a copy of the letter sent to the Emperor by the Cardinals announcing their choice After a few months, Clement, the Anti-pope, was set[7] up at Avignon, and the great schism commenced, France, Spain, and Scotland taking the side of Clement.

The narrative then proceeds to notice the grants of revenue and the evil consequences which grew out of them, only interjecting a mention of the sending of Thomas[8] of Woodstock to the help of the Duke of

[3] Edwd. III. died 21st June 1377 at Shene.

[4] A full account of the Coronation ceremonies is given in Chron. Angl. pp. 156–162 and Fœdera, iv., pp. 9–10.

[5] He had been mentioned before (p. 117), and the notice of him throws interesting light on monastic life.

This was on April 8th, 1378. Gregory XI. died March 27th. Further details are given (Cont. Eul. iii. p. 341).

[7] This was on Sept. 21st.

[8] For a full account, cf. Chron. Angl. p. 266. The notice in Knighton is only made because of the marriage connexion between

Brittany. First of all is mentioned the grant of a groat a head; next, that afterwards two shillings was granted[1] for every married couple, and 12 pence for each one unmarried; while the clergy were taxed at the rate of six shillings and eight pence. Yet it was found that the larger impositions did not bring into the Treasury as much money as the previous year's groat had done.[2]

The collection of the tax had been farmed by one John Leg and others, and they had roused popular wrath by their grossness in the work. First the Kentish people were stirred to resistance[3] by one Thomas, a baker, and the events in Knighton's record follow each other thus. There was first a gathering[4] of the people on Blackheath, who proceeded to Maydestone, where they attacked the Archbishop's house, and released John Ball, known as a popular preacher, who was in prison there. Next they proceeded to London[5] and wrecked the Marshalsea, and made their way to the Tower where the King was, and along with him other persons against Angl.* p. 281) to have been granted by the parliament of Northampton in 1380, and collected non sine diris imprecationibus. The groat tax is called anni præcedentis (Cont. Eul. iii. p. 351). There had been imposed for the first time in 1377; poll-tax of a groat (Wals. i. 323); cf. Monk of Evesh. p. 11, on the taxation of 1379.

[2] Cf. Cont. Eul. iii. p. 351, for the way in which an inquiry into the subject originated. Of the collection it is said Pol. Poems, i. 224, "The King thereof had small."

[4] Knighton intended to give the date, but it is impossible to make out what he means. For the feast of Trinity was not in the month of May. The 4th day after the feast of Trinity was June 13th.

[5] They reached London on June 13th, Corpus Christi day (Cont. Eul. iii. p. 353). But this was not dies Veneris as Knighton (p. 132), but Thursday. They wrecked the Marshalsea before they crossed London Bridge; so that took place on the Wednesday.

whom the people were infuriated. They specially determined to kill the Archbishop. The King [1] met them and granted them a charter,[2] which was subsequently annulled by Parliament. But the violence of the mob was not to be restrained. The Archbishop and others were killed; the Savoy, the Duke [3] of Lancaster's house, was wrecked, and everything in it destroyed; for no plundering was allowed.[4] The priory of Clerkenwell, and the manor house of Highbury shared a like fate.[5] The anger of the mob was greatest against lawyers; also one Richard Lyons,[6] who had formerly been imprisoned for frauds, was seized and put to death.

Then followed the gathering in [7] Smithfield, to which the King came. Knighton here makes Jack [8] Straw to be only another name for Wat Tyler. He tells the story of the demands of the rioters, the manner of Wat Tyler's death,[9] the honours conferred on those who took part in the suppression of the insurrection; and finally describes how the rioters were surrounded and forced to disperse. He has also preserved several forms of what must have been popular literature at the time in the addresses of some of the leaders, and a letter of John Ball.[1]

He mentions also similar risings[2] in Norfolk; at Peterborough, where it was speedily put down by the war-loving Bishop of Norwich, Henry le Spencer. He tells of the large demands of the rioters at St. Albans, and the fears entertained in his own neighbourhood of Leicester, lest they should come thither too, and of the preparations which were made to withstand them if they did appear.

Amid the alarm the wardrobe treasures of the Duke of Lancaster were brought to the abbey of Leicester, but the abbat durst not admit them. The mention of this incident leads to a digression on the doings[3] of John of Gaunt at this time, and no more is said of the insurgents and their fate till (at p. 150) we find Sir Robert Tresilyan trying the prisoners, and that John Ball was hanged at St. Albans, with the mention of which Knighton takes leave of this portion of the history.

The Duke of Lancaster was in Scotland at this period, and the duchess fled northward,[4] and not being admitted to Pontefract Castle, she went on to Knaresborough to wait for her husband. He heard of all that had been done in England, but quietly finished his negotiations[5] with the Scots, and got permission to pass into Scotland.

[1] A much fuller history of these doings is given in Chron. Angl. pp. 285–299.

[2] On all these cf. Chron. Angl. pp. 299–316. The story is compressed into half a dozen lines in Cont. Eul. iii. p. 359.

[3] Knighton is most important from the favourable estimate which he gives us of the character of John of Gaunt. Of course we must take into account the duke's connexion with and liberality to Leicester Abbey in judging the Chronicler's language. But the duke is hardly ever named but as "pius dux" or with some laudatory words as here (p. 143) "pacificus dux Lancastriæ."

[4] For protection "sub alas domini" according to this Chronicler (p. 144). Hard to understand side by side with notices of Catharine Swynford.

[5] He concluded a truce for two years before the news of the outbreak in England became known to the Scots (Chron. Angl. p. 327.)

The Earl of Northumberland had offered him some hospitality, but durst [1] not in the end receive him. His rivals reported that the King was hostile to him, and of this he was afraid, and retired to Edinburgh. He was well received by the Earls of Douglas and Dunbar. Here Knighton gives an account [2] of the duke's self-examination, and his determination to amend his life.

The King got information of the duke's sadness and alarm, and not only wrote to him, but bade the Earl of Northumberland give him help. The like order was sent forth generally, and at last the duke came [3] to the King at Reading. Knighton begs none to be surprised at his laudation of John of Gaunt. His virtues deserved all the praise that can be bestowed.

After a mention of the King's marriage,[4] and of a general pardon granted at the Queen's request, and of the earthquake [5] on May 21st, 1382, Knighton begins a notice of Wycliffe and his teaching, naming John Ball as his forerunner. He calls the translation of the Scriptures into English a casting of pearls before swine, and applies to the followers of Wycliffe certain prophetic language which William de Sancto Amore had used of the Mendicant Friars.

After this for about 40 pages the Chronicler treats only of Wycliffe and his followers. But he does not pay much regard to chronology in his record. He mentions

[1] The Chron. Angl. p. 328, represents them as at variance, and tells of the accusation of the earl by the duke before the Parliament.

[2] The contrast presented here to the hatred with which he was generally regarded is one of the most striking parts of Knighton's record.

[3] Cf. for the account of the duke's return, Chron. Angl. p. 329. The King's letter on behalf of the duke is given, Rymer, iv. p. 126.

[4] Solutis pro ea 22 m. marcis sine consensu regni is the note on the queen's arrival in Cont. Eul. iii. p. 355. In the Chron. of Usk she is spoken of as magno pretio redempta.

[5] A poem on this catastrophe, setting out how it "was a warnyng to be ware," yet the people disregarded it, is found in Political Poems (Rolls Series), i. 251.

first how Wycliffe was summoned before the Archbishop [1] of Canterbury in London, an event which took place in 1378. The Duke of Lancaster's help and Wycliffe's confession about Transubstantiation [2] are all that is recorded. Then follows a list [3] of Errors and Heresies on the ground of which it is said the Reformer was cited to appear in Oxford before the Archbishop [4] and other bishops, where he gave another form of answer to the charges against him. His opinions were condemned [5] and a procession of clergy and laity went in London to hear a sermon by one Dr. Kynyngham [6] in which the Wycliffite conclusions were denounced. A story follows showing how a follower of these new doctrines who had heard Dr. Kynyngham's sermon was convinced of his error by a miracle. After this the Archbishop issued to the bishops his mandate in condemnation of Wycliffe, and this was appointed to be circulated in every diocese. Knighton preserves the form as sent forth by the Bishop of Lincoln, and with it a condemnation of the heretical teaching by the Chancellor [7] of the University of Oxford. The narrative continues with notices of some adherents

[1] This was Archbishop Sudbury, slain in the insurrection of Wat Tyler.

[2] The writer of the Chronicle can have understood little of what he was putting down, or he would not have called this confession a recantation. As little so is the other form which he gives on p. 161.

[3] These are given in a slightly different order in Fasc. Ziz. p. 277. They are 24 in number, and formed the indictment against Wycliffe at the provincial council at the Blackfriars in London in 1382.

[4] This was Archbishop Courtenay promoted from London in 1381. That Archbishop Courtenay came to Oxford is not supported by other records. In Chron. Angl. p. 344, we find that a mandate issued by him to the Chancellor of Oxford to publish a condemnation of Wycliffe's errors was disregarded, until pressure was brought to bear upon the University authorities.

[5] This was at the Council of May 19, 1382. It was during their session that the earthquake took place, Fasc. Ziz. p. 272. A Latin poem on this council, taking the side of the Lollards, is given in Polit. Poems, i. 253 seqq.

of Wycliffe and their opinions. John Ball[1] is again mentioned as his forerunner, and some confessions are given as made by Nicholas of Hereford and John Aston[2] before the Archbishop of Canterbury. The former went to Rome after his condemnation in England, and there was condemned to be imprisoned for life, but in the unsettled conditions of the Papacy he was liberated; but afterwards imprisoned in England.

Next there is given a list of the opinions set forth by one of the Wycliffite preachers who is not named, then the similar preaching of John Aston,[3] among whose subjects of special animadversion was the crusade of the Bishop of Norwich against the supporters of the Anti-pope.

Next the preaching of John Purvey,[4] who had been a close friend of Wycliffe, is noticed: then a preacher of a more humble kind, William Smith, but such men won adherents.[5] Knighton tells of some of their actions as indications of their profanity. He specially dwells on the burning for fuel of a wooden image of St. Catharine which had stood in one of the churches.[6] He also pre-

[1] Ball in his confession (Fasc. Ziz., p. 273, calls himself a discipulus of Wycliffe, and names (p. 274) Wycliffe, Hereford, Aston, and Laurence Bedenam as the chief of the Lollard Teachers.

[2] These are acceptances of the doctrine of a real presence in the Eucharist, and Aston's confession is a translation of the Latin form given Fasc. Ziz. p. 330, which was objected to because he only used the words vere et realiter, whereas he was expected to say, Corpus Christi est in sacramento identice, vere et realiter in propria presentia corporali, which words he did use afterwards. Hereford did not yield so far.

[3] It is said (Chron. Ang. p. 350) that in Aston's trial before the Archbishop the people of London interfered and broke in the doors of the council chamber.

[4] For an account of the heresies and errors laid against Purvey see Fasc. Ziz. p. 383–407, where is also given his form of abjuration at St. Paul's Cross.

[5] Knighton gives (p. 181) a list of names of some soldiers who joined the Lollards, and some of the names, with others, are found in a similar list in Chron. Ang. p. 377.

serves, though with some imperfections, certain rhyming verses written on that subject.[1]

After this follows a general recitation of the iniquities of the Lollards, their dress, their manner of making converts, their language against their opponents, their evil influence on home life. They might be called followers of Mahomet, and no tongue can tell all their iniquity. Then the Chronicler frames against them a malediction, in scriptural phrases slightly modified, praying that they may perish for ever.

After this general condemnation we have the history of one William Swyndurby, whose doings came under the personal observation of the Chronicler, as he was a priest in Leicester. He begun his work [2] as a reformer by attacking the failings of women, then he preached against the rich. For a while he turned hermit, and subsequently was received into Leicester Abbey. But joining himself to the William Smith before mentioned, he began to abuse the ecclesiastics, and to follow in the courses of the rest of the Lollards. He was suspended by the Bishop [3] of Lincoln but still continued his preaching. In consequence the bishop condemned him to be burnt, but the "pius dux" of Lancaster interposed, being (says the record) deceived as many others were, and the offender was allowed to make a public recantation [4] of his errors. The process of the Bishop of Lincoln against Swyndurby is given in full, with a list

[1] For an abusive poem on the Lollards, in which several names of persons prominent at this time are mentioned, see Pol. Poems, i. 231–249. There, even more iniquities than are noticed by Knighton are ascribed to them.

[2] For a time the popular favour upheld him against the opposition of the clergy and the authority of the Bishop, Chron. Ang. pp. 339–340.

[3] The process of the Bishop of Lincoln against Swyndurby is given in Fasc. Ziz. pp. 334 seqq., with a form of his recantation. It is also mentioned that he made an appeal to the King and the Duke of Lancaster. The 'conclusiones' of Swyndurby are given in a different form in Chron. Ang. p. 338.

[4] This was to be read in eight churches of the diocese of Lincoln. Fasc. Ziz. p. 336.

of the errors which he abjured. Of course the man's popularity in Leicester was gone, and he removed to Coventry, but was soon driven away.

With the exception of a general notice [1] (pp. 260–265) of the spread of Wycliffite opinions, which caused the Lords and Commons to appeal to the King for a remedy, whose royal commission to seize all Lollard books and punish the teachers of Lollardism is given in full, we hear nothing more of the Reformation movements, only that in 1392 all that had been done against the Wycliffites by the Bishop of Lincoln received confirmation from the Archbishop (p. 312).

Of secular history in 1383 the Chronicle notices the crusade of the Bishop [2] of Norwich in Flanders against the supporters of the Anti-pope. His success was at first considerable, but after the English troops in Bourbourg had been forced to capitulate to the French King, the bishop came home to England. As a sequel to their other successes, the French captured Damme and a large part of Flanders, Ghent surrendering only after all hope of help from England had expired.

Here are added the Ordinances [3] issued by the Bishop

[1] This is put under the year 1388. In Walsingham (ii. 159) great activity is said to have been shown on behalf of the Lollards in the previous year; the outcome of which may well have been the appeal which Knighton mentions.

[2] Knighton dwells much on the power 'multipliciter dispensandi' as it is called in Chron. Ang. (p. 355) which the Bishop had received from the Pope. He does not mention that the Bishop was subsequently deprived for a time of his temporalities, and some of his officers imprisoned, as does Chron. Ang. (p. 358). The Cont. Eul. (pp. 356–7) is very bitter against the Bishop, and tells of the intervention of the Duke of Brittany on behalf of the English. On the restoration of the Bishop's temporalities see Chron. Angl. (p. 367). A royal proclamation giving licence to the crusade and to those who would join it is in Rymer iv. 157, and several others connected with the enterprise are on pp. 164–169.

[3] Wals. (ii. 76) enumerates the privileges granted by the Pope to the Bishop for the promotion of the crusade, and adds, besides, the Bishop's mandate to his clergy about the publication of the Bull, and a form of absolution for all who would join the Bishop's expedition.

before the crusade, about the preaching of it, and the means to be used for inducing men to join in it, or support it with their money.

The inroad of the Scots [1] in 1383, followed by the march of the Duke of Lancaster against them in the following year, are the events of most importance in the Chronicler's view. Indeed his admiration for the 'pious duke' comes out here at every point. He mentions a combat [2] in the lists at Westminster, because it was in the presence of the King and the duke, and when help was sent to Scotland from France in 1385, it was the duke, with others, who was sent to guard the marches till Richard's forces could be in readiness. An account of this expedition, which embraced the burning of Edinburgh and the destruction of Melrose [3] and Newbottle abbeys, is next given and it is mentioned that while the English were on the East of Scotland, the Scots on the west came down on Carlisle and Penrith, and only were disturbed in their ravages by an apparition, said to be the Virgin Mary, the special patroness of Carlisle.

Many honours [4] were bestowed by the King after this campaign, and it is mentioned that while the troops were near Bishopthorpe in Yorkshire the son of the Earl of Stafford was killed by Sir John de Holand, and it was the intervention of the pious duke which helped to save the offender from the King's sentence,[5] and to secure for him the father's forgiveness.

[1] Cont. Eul. (p. 358) says the French were united with the Scots in this invasion. On the losses in the Duke of Lancaster's invasion cf. Chr. Ang. p. 358.

[2] On this cf. Chron. Ang. (p. 361).

[3] Over Melrose burnt the Chron. Angl. (p. 364) sighs 'quod dolendum fuit.' Knighton's notice of these movements is fuller than the others.

[4] Cf. Chron. Ang. (p. 367) and Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 358). This was after the parliament held at Westminster 20 Oct. 1385.

[5] Chron. Ang., p. 365, says that Sir John took sanctuary at Beverley. It is interesting to think he may have sat on the frith-stool still existing there.

In the Parliament of 1385, the duke obtained permission to go to Spain [1] in order to prosecute his claim to the kingdom which was made in right of his wife.

The year was notable for the large number of French vessels, more than 80 in all, which were captured [2] by the English.

Ere the duke set out on his voyage he took leave of the King and received costly presents, and it was by royal command that men were bidden to call him King of Spain, and pay him royal honours. The fleet sailed from Plymouth, and Henry his son, along with many other nobles, joined the expedition, which was also to receive help from Portugal.[3] But by a marriage between the daughter of the duke [4] and the son of the King of Spain, war was avoided, and the expedition came home. Though the story is thus compressed by the Chronicler into a very few sentences, the return was not till the year 1389. He does, however, mention a great incident of the voyage out to Spain. This was the relief of the castle of Brest, which was then besieged by the Duke of Brittany. The works raised about it were thrown down, and it was said that their dead were cast into the sea by the French and Bretons, lest the English should know the greatness of the disaster they had inflicted.[5] Several other sucesses are noticed as occurring in the great duke's voyage, and the

[2] On these captures, cf. Chron. Ang., p. 371, where the wooden wall is mentioned of which Knighton tells (p. 212).

[3] One of the duke's daughters (Philippa) was married to the King of Portugal in 1387.

[4] Catherine of Lancaster married Henry, prince of the Asturias, in 1393. The duke received 200,000 crowns and a pension for the lives of himself and his duchess (cf. Adam de Usk, p. 7). Knighton knew of these payments, but his figures are somewhat vague.

[5] This is not mentioned in other Chronicles. The fortifications of Brest were soon restored, and were again destroyed by the Earl of Arundel in 1387 (Wals. ii. 155).

Chronicler ends the account saying he will record nothing more of the duke till further news reaches him. Nor does his name again appear till p. 313 under the year 1390.

Affairs in connexion with France are next noticed; how from Calais Henry Percy and others made frequent raids; and how the English effected many captures, some of which Michael de la Pole, the chancellor, having been bribed (as was said) caused to be restored.[1] Incidental mention is made of a trial and punishment of coiners.

Meantime, Charles the King of France was making great preparations for a descent on England, but the Captain of Calais was able to take some of the French ships beforehand, and the rest, which gathered [2] at Sluys, were prevented from crossing by contrary winds.[3] English troops which had been assembled to resist the invaders were disbanded, and did much harm by plundering on their way home. The Chronicler has personal knowledge of these outrages.

The disappointed King of France next made a treacherous attempt to get possession of Ghent, but the plot was discovered and the Frenchmen concerned in it were put to death.

The Earl of Oxford (De Vere), a favourite of the King was made [4] Duke of Ireland this year, at which time began the demands of the nobles and commonalty for the dismissal of De la Pole from his office of chancellor, and of the Bishop of Durham from that of Treasurer.

[1] The matter is put in a more favourable light for the chancellor: Chron. Angl. (p. 371). It was on appeal that certain Genoese were granted compensation for their vessels. Still the Chronicler murmurs.

[2] Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 358) says the fleet was prepared 'propter ligam cum rege Hispaniæ.'

[3] Deo regnum Angliæ protegente, non homine, Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 359).

[4] In the Parliament of Westminster, 1 Oct. 1386. Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 359). It was known as the 'Wonderful Parliament.'

The King at first refused to accede to these, and there is given a sketch of the address of the parliament to King Richard, in which it is pointed out that in the last resort, if the King will not meet his parliament nor grant redress, he may be deposed. After this the King yielded, new ministers [1] were appointed, and articles of arraignment drawn up against the chancellor, which are given in full.

The next step was the appointment [2] of a council of nobles to take oversight of the affairs of the kingdom, and the King swore to abide by their ordinances. After this a revenue was granted to him. The terms of the commission, and the conditions on which the grant to the King was made, are recorded from the original documents.

The other incidents chronicled for this year 1386 are the capture of 14 French ships by William Beauchamp, and the northward journey of King Richard to settle some disputes in which the Archbishop of York was concerned. The King and Queen were lodged at Leicester abbey on their way north. In 1387 the expedition of the earl of Arundel, in which he captured some Flemish and French vessels and destroyed the French siege-works at Brest,[3] and in returning found and took more Flemish and some Scotch vessels in the harbour of Sluys, is the first event noticed. Then the moving of the King's Bench to Coventry, and the coming thither of the King and Queen. Later on, by appointment, some of the justices of the realm met the King and his favourites

[1] The Chron. Angl. (p. 374) describes Bp. Arundel, the new chancellor, as "vir qui justitiam præferret auro," but says of Bp. Gilbert, the treasurer 'vir qui plus 'lingua quam fide vigebat.'

[2] The list in Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 360) and that in Knighton do not accord, but Knighton's is correct and complete if we add the three principal officers of state: Arundel bp. of Ely, chancellor; Gilbert, bp. of Hereford, treasurer; and John de Waltham, keeper of the privy seal. Johannes de Eurose, in Knighton, is John Devereux.

at Shrewsbury, and were questioned by them concerning the validity of the Acts of the late Parliament. From the nature of their answers they were commanded to meet the King in Council [1] at Nottingham, where certain questions were put to them, and they were forced to put their seals to answers such as pleased the King and his party. The questions and answers are given at length [2] (p. 237) with names of the royal favourites as witnesses to the signatures.

An expedition of Henry Percy (Hotspur) to raise the siege of Brest took place [3] this year, and was successful, though, in returning, the fleet suffered from stormy weather. On the 16th September 1387 the King and Queen were lodged in Leicester abbey, and with them were some of the King's friends. A suit involving local interests is mentioned because it was tried at Melton Mowbray.

On Sunday, November the 10th, the King reached London accompanied by his favourites (auricularibus reprobis) and they were met by the authorities in state, but they gave great offence, by neglecting a clerical procession which came forth to join in the welcome. News was soon brought that the Duke of Gloucester and his friends were near London, and both the King's party and the citizens' were disturbed thereby. A proclamation was issued that none should furnish supplies of any kind to the Earl [4] of Arundel. The lords occupied positions on the outskirts of London, and sent messengers asking that the King should dismiss his

[1] This was 25th Aug. 1387.

[2] So are they also in Chron. Angl. (p. 380) and Cont. Eulog. (iii. p. 361). In the latter it is added that one of the signatories said, "Jam "meruimus cordas quibus sus- "pendamur, quia timore mortis "hæc dicta fuerunt et non de "veritate."

[3] In Chron. Angl. (p. 376) it is said he was sent out improperly supplied, and this through jealousy of his past successes.

evil counsellors. The favourites meantime are said to have suggested that Richard should seek help from France, and rumour[1] said that a messenger had been sent to the French King, and an order to the governor of Calais that he should give up that fortress to the French, which he refused to obey.

Other reports are that the favourites counselled[2] a struggle and that the Lord Mayor of London was requested to gather a force, but people and nobles alike declined to serve against those whom they saw to be the real friends of king and people. In this strait the Earl of Northumberland and others advised the King to send for the three noblemen, who, to make the people of London fully aware of their position, had sent a letter to them, setting forth their allegiance to the King, and that their sole wish was to remove his evil counsellors.

The King's messengers are well received, and the Duke of Gloucester, the Earl of Arundel, and the Earl of Warwick consent to meet the King, though there was a rumour[3] of a plot to kill them. Richard promised to bring the five persons accused before the next Parliament, and in the meantime by proclamation[4] (of which the Chronicler gives the text) he took both the three Lords and the accused under his special protection.[5] Through the influence of the King's favourites there was delay made in summoning a Parliament, and the Archbishop of York, the Duke of Ireland, and De la Pole[6] took to flight. But the King cannot be without De Vere, and steps are taken to bring him in safety to London.

The three Lords therefore gathered their forces, and attacked those who had come to the support of the Duke of Ireland near Radcote-bridge, and the Duke himself only escaped by swimming his horse across the Thames, while a great number of his supporters were drowned in the marshes.

Then the troops of the Lords go first to Oxford,[1] and afterwards to London,[2] where the Lord Mayor, Nicholas Exton, offered them the keys of the City.[3] It was then agreed that there should be a conference between the Lords and the King, and for this object they came to the Tower,[4] and the King was induced to consent to the arrest of his favourites, and a great number of persons were arrested and consigned to custody in various places, and others were removed from their positions about the King.

At the close of this very eventful year, the Chronicler mentions some singular appearances of fire, which were specially noticed in Leicestershire and Northamptonshire. He describes something very like magnified Will o'the Wisps. He also mentions a quarrel between [5] the Welsh and Southerners in Oxford on one side, and the Northerners on the other, in which there was some blood shed, and in consequence the chancellor of the University was deposed.

In 1388 the Parliament was assembled at Westminster,[6] and the justiciaries who had given answer to the King's questions at Nottingham in the previous year were arrested and placed in the Tower. The King's favourites were summoned to appear, but they had made their escape, and were therefore declared outlaws. The increase of Wycliffites here recorded (p. 260), has already been noticed, and the means taken for their suppression.

There is next given a petition presented to the King in this Parliament for the suppression of many abuses. The perversion of justice, the corruption of the judges, the inequality of taxation, and the decay of the national defences are among the topics of complaint, and a commission is asked to carry out suggested measures of remedy.

The Flemings seek for peace with England, but terms are not agreed on, and serious outbreaks arise in Flanders. The Duke of Geldres pays homage to the English King at this Parliament.

And there then began[1] the accusation of the King's favourites, the Archbishop of York, the Duke of Ireland, Michael de la Pole, Robert Tresilyan and Nicholas Brembre, and the articles of their wrong doing are given at length (pp. 272–292). De Vere,[2] Archbishop Nevill, and De la Pole had fled. Tresilyan's hiding place was betrayed by a servant, and he was seized and executed, and Nicholas Brembre was beheaded on a block which he was reported to have prepared for others. Several others of the King's retainers were executed, and those who had fled were declared outlaws.[3] The justices too,

[1] Cf. Cont. Eul. iii. (p. 366).

[2] De Vere was killed while hunting at Louvain in 1392. His body was brought to England and buried at Colne priory in Essex. Archbishop Neville retired to a small cure in Louvain, where he died in 1391. Pope Urban had given him the bishopric of St. Andrews, but he, for safety, continued to live abroad; and Scotland, holding with Clement VII., would not have accepted him as bishop. De la Pole died in Paris in 1389.

[3] This parliament, known as the merciless, sat for 122 days (sine misericordia, ii. p. 249).

were condemned to death, but the Queen appealed for them, and their sentence was commuted to an imprisonment, each within certain definite limits, not be passed upon pain of death.

Against the Scotch, who had come into England by the Western Marches, Henry Percy is sent and is taken prisoner. The battle was not far from Carlisle, and among the Scotch prisoners was James Lindsay, the brother of the Scottish Queen.

A new Archbishop of York, in the place of Alexander Nevill, was appointed, and several other episcopal changes were consequential thereupon. Then followed an important Parliament[1] at Cambridge, where grants were made for the war with Scotland, and several enactments passed for the welfare of the realm; the liberties of the church were safeguarded; public and court offices were not to be obtained by bribery or favour, but by desert: servants were not to wander away without license; a regulation of wages was fixed: and other orders for the behaviour and life of labouring people, for the suppression of beggary, and the relief of the needy; also for the numbers of the justices of the peace, and the regulation of their courts. The Parliament also decided that those should be punished who imperilled in anywise the sanitary condition of cities or great towns. Other statutes dealt with the length and breadth of manufactured cloths; with illegal procuration of benefices, and with the place of the wool staple.

In that year, 1388, the Scotch made a raid into England, for which the English retaliated in the year following. A riot among the scholars[2] at Oxford was appeased by the intervention of the Duke of Gloucester.

[1] From Sept. 9th to Oct. 17th, 1388.

[2] The parties to the disturbance are described exactly as those in the previous year. This seems to be, if not the same, only a continuation of the former riot.

The King removed from office in this year the chief ministers of State, as a token of his own freedom [1] from tutelage.

Truces were made with all the nations of the continent at this time. The next event noticed is the visitation of the diocese of Lincoln in 1392 by William Courtenay, Archbishop of Canterbury, who proceeded against the Lollards, and put many of them to penance.

Two years before this the Duke of Lancaster had returned from Spain, and made a great hunting party in the parks round Leicester, while his son Henry went with a band of men to do service in Prussia. But England was in sore distress. Food and money were both scarce, so that the aldermen and citizens of London contributed for the purchase of food for the needy.

The Parliament of 1391 dealt with the law of Mortmain, for the evasion of which means were soon discovered.

The Duke of Gueldres urged the English King to go on with the war against France, but it was agreed that the Duke of Lancaster, with others, should first go to Amiens (in 1392) to confer with the French about peace, which was done next year (p. 321), and in the following year [2] a truce was agreed upon for four years and four months (1393).

In a council at Nottingham [3] the mayor, sheriffs, and aldermen of London were summoned and deprived of their offices for offences which are not recited. Sir

[1] It was on May 8th that the King issued letters to the sheriffs declaring what he had done. And the people were rejoiced.

[2] Cf. Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 369) where the terms proposed by France are mentioned and the opposition shown to them by the Duke of Gloucester, and the Earls of Arundel and Warwick.

[3] The Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 367) mentions Woodstock as the place to which the mayor and sheriffs were summoned, and that Richard, having asked them for a loan of money and being refused deprived them of their privileges. It is added also that owing to the large sums necessary to be raised for getting back their position some men fled away from London.

Edward Balerynge[1] is made warden of the City of London, but by submission the city was restored to the royal favour, and on the King's return to London a grand reception[2] was given to him and to the Queen, and they were conducted in state to Westminster Hall, and the King's Bench and the Court of Chancery again resumed their sessions in London (A.D. 1393). The Chronicle[3] concludes with a few disconnected entries, viz., the death of Queen Anna (1394); the expedition of the Duke of Lancaster to Acquitaine,[4] and King Richard's to Ireland (1394). The holding of a Parliament in Ireland and the return of the King and the duke from their respective journeys (1395). And last of all a notice of the still enduring schism of the papacy in which the French, in the University of Paris, adhered to Pope Clement, and the University of Oxford, consulted[5] by King Richard, declared for Pope Urban.

From this comparison of Knighton's work with other contemporary records it will be seen that the independent, and therefore the valuable, portion of his Chronicle commences only with the last chapter of Book III. In the IVth and Vth Books, published in this volume, there is much that is important, especially in regard to the

[1] The name is given elsewhere as Dalengrig.

[2] A long elegiac Latin poem on this reconciliation, by Richard de Maidstone, is printed in Polit. Poems (i. 282, seqq.), and is full of interest as a picture of the life and manners of the time.

[3] The Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 369) says no record is given by its author of the years 1393–4 "propter varietatem regni Angliæ," by which is meant, probably, the instability of everything. A similar entry for 1391 adds "quia regnum Angliæ fuit in malo statu."

[4] Cf. Cont. Eul. (iii. p. 370). The dukedom of Acquitaine had been granted to the Duke of Lancaster by the King in 1390, but the gift to John of Gaunt was opposed by the people of Bordeaux and other towns. The crossing of the King to Ireland is also noticed on the same page. Some of the Irish princes (puri Hibernici) were brought to England by the King.

[5] No doubt the consultations of the Universities both in France and in England were with the hope of bringing the schism to an end.

domestic history. With reference to Book V., I incline to the opinion, expressed by Dr. Shirley in a note to page 524 of the Fasciculi Zizaniorum, that it is not by the same hand as the rest. Knighton, according to the Lament prefixed to his introduction in A, was growing blind towards the end of his work. Such a calamity would account for the abrupt way in which Book IV. is brought to an end (see p. 123), and for the gap which occurs between Books IV. and V. The accession of Richard II., with which Book V. opens, would form a fair starting point for a new writer, who would not feel called upon to notice the events of the closing years of Edward.

This new writer (who appears, like Knighton, to have known a great deal about Leicester Abbey and the country round about) may have belonged to the same fraternity. If this hypothesis be accepted, it helps us to an explanation of the difficult sentence in the Introduction (vol. i. pp. 3–4) where Knighton describes the division of his book. That work (as we are supposing) consisted of four books. The addition, made as is here assumed, raised the number to five. The words of the introduction had at first been IV. or quatuor, where we now twice over read quinque or V. This was noticed by a copyist (for we have not in these MSS. the original writing) and, having five books, he made the alteration of IV. into V., but did not see that he was leaving a difficulty for time to come in the words tertiam and quartam, which still stand, as though the work were in four parts and no more.

Dr. Shirley has also noted a difference of style in the language of the two books, and a very slight comparison is needed to see that the manner of arrangement is different. In book V. the writer deals with his matter almost en bloc. He says what he has to say on each subject in a connected narrative and then leaves it, and passes to something else.[1] He also has not as much zeal for noting details of prices, taxation, the assembling of parliament, and such matters, which are constantly recorded in the previous book. There is in both books the same interest shown in all which concerns the fortunes of the house of Lancaster, and in the prosperity of the religious foundations of Leicester. But this interest would exist in all the members of the monastic body whose fortunes were so closely bound up with the Lancastrian family.

In the notices of continental history this Chronicle needs to be largely supplemented from other narratives. The campaigns of Edward III. in France and of the Black Prince in France and Spain are recorded only in a general outline, and it is seldom that we find, as we do in the story of the meeting of Edward with Louis the Emperor (vol. II., p. 5), more of precise detail in Knighton than occurs elsewhere. On the contrary, when he writes of the conflicts so constantly occurring at this time between the English and the Scots, he has often some particulars to record which are peculiar to himself. This probably comes to pass because the head of the house of Lancaster though more than once changed during the period covered by the Chronicle, was almost always concerned in what was doing.

And in this connexion the Vth book is specially remarkable for the laudatory estimate which the writer gives us of John of Gaunt, so much differing in this respect from nearly every other record of the time, but showing that the reputation which Shakespeare has

[1] The book is mainly occupied by four subjects treated in this fashion:—i. The rebellion of Wat Tyler. ii. The character and doings of John of Gaunt. iii. Wycliffe and the Lollards. iv. The proceedings against king Richard's ministers in 1386–1388, to the conclusion of the Merciless Parliament. The other events which are noticed receive only very brief mention.

embodied in his 'time-honoured Lancaster' was accorded to the duke by some in his own day.

In book IV. Lancaster comes into no great prominence and is simply mentioned by name or title, but the writer of the Vth book omits no opportunity of laudation. He is well aware of Gaunt's unpopularity. He says (p. 146) that, at the time of Wat Tyler's insurrection, he was hated super omnes mortales. But dux pacificus, dux pius, are the epithets which the Chronicler himself applies to him on the same page. The latter of these terms occurs almost at every allusion to him.[1] He is pacis amator et reformator (p. 146) and is several times spoken of as being under special care of divine providence.[2] He is pietatis robore fundatus (p. 148) and in his dealing with an enemy also he is pius, ut semper pius erat (p. 209).

The duke's departure for Spain, whither he went to claim the kingdom, affords a special occasion for glorifying him. He sets out on his expedition in nomine Domini (p. 207), and after the arrangements were made on account of which the claim was waived, the Chronicler tells with much pride (and his knowledge is gained from one of the duke's own retinue), how the King of Spain met him with seven and forty mules bearing chests full of gold, as part payment for foregoing his claim.

The only thing which the writer finds to regret in the duke's doings is that he was always ready to stand by the Lollards (p. 193). But for this he has an apology. The pious duke believed them to be saints of God, by reason of their bland words and looks, whereby he, like many others, was deceived.

For the Chronicler hates Wycliffe and his followers with a bitter hatred, and spends all the powers of his language in painting their evil character (pp. 181–187), winding up with declaring them no better than followers of Mahomet. He knows little or nothing of the signs of the times or the meaning of the Lollard movement. Nor has he eyes to see that Gaunt, who heartily desired to break the power of the clergy, found in Wycliffe and his preachers very useful weapons for his purpose.

[1] Cf. ii. 143, 144, 148, 149, 157, 193, 203, 204, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, the words occurring sometimes twice or thrice on the same page.

[2] Cf. ii. 147, 148.

But it is for the light which he sheds upon the condition of England in his time, and on the changes therein which then began, that Knighton has a special value. And this remark applies very particularly to the matter contained in Book IV. We learn much from him about the fluctuations of prices[1] and the causes thereof; of the great importance of the wool crop of the country, and the privileges attached to those places where the staples[2] were fixed for its purchase and sale. He records the prices of various kinds of grain, of wine, and of cattle, and gives a tragic account of the effects produced by the pestilential visitations of the time not only on the value but on the supply of food of all kinds.[3] We gather much from him about the rate of wages, and the vain attempts that were made to regulate these by the artificial aid of legislation. On this subject he is rich in information, and we can see clearly how at this time the conditions of society were becoming entirely altered, largely in consequence of the devastations of the plague; how the labourer found that he could demand and obtain high pay for his services, and how for lack of population other results came about, cattle were untended, crops unreaped, and a general recklessness prevailed.

The workers who had been adscripti glebæ secured a different position, and attained their freedom. Rents on every side fell, the owners of land making any sacrifice, if only they might keep it in cultivation. Relations which had grown up under the feudal system were broken through, and the arrangement came in whereby the lands of the nobles and the monasteries were let to tenants at a yearly rental.

[1] ii. 2, 8, 15, 233, 235, 236.

Nor was it only in the classes of labourers, tenants, and owners of land that the effects of the pestilence made itself felt. There was in the Church first a dearth of clergy, and then a flood of ill-educated candidates came forward to fill the vacant places. This was about 1350, and 40 years later he paints for us a desperate picture of the condition of the country.[1] A poor harvest in 1390 was enough to reduce the people to the verge of starvation in spite of good years which had gone before. The money of the country had been drained away: the laws forbade merchants to carry their wool abroad for sale, and the prices they could obtain for it at home were miserably low. Food, he tells us, was not dear, but that was small consolation when there was no money wherewith to purchase it. And this was the case to such a degree that the Corporation of London found it needful to contribute for the purchase of corn to be supplied at low rates to the people, so that the needy might be saved from perishing.

Yet in the midst of these terrible narratives we have records[2] of increased extravagance among the wealthy, and of the need of sumptuary laws[3] to restrain the humbler sort from aping the manners and dress of their superiors in station. And we find a very graphic confirmation in another Chronicle[4] of Knighton's remarks about this rage for apparel. There the writer describes various newfangled garments which had come into vogue, and tells us of their materials and their cost, and adds thereto that such display had very evil effects on the character of their wearers, so that the writer declares he trembles lest there come again upon the land a terrible scourge of the Lord.

Knighton tells us much too about the taxation, granted by the Parliaments, or demanded by the King, for the various wars, destined to be all fruitless in the end, by which the national resources were being exhausted. Mostly the demands are for subsidies of war but at times for other needs, as when a princess to be married is to be supplied with a dowry. And the complaints [1] which found utterance in Richard's reign prove that the sums drawn from the people at that time were often squandered upon royal favourites. The language in which taxation is spoken of is also instructive. Grants of Parliament are made, not always without demur, and then the phrase is concessa est. But now and again we have traces of other procedure in such expressions [2] as rex multavit, rex fecit capere, rex misit clericos, and these, we may be certain, were agents who did not readily accept a refusal.

A minor, but by no means trifling, drain on the resources of the nation was the cost of the visits of such Cardinals [3] as were sent from time to time from the Pope to treat for peace between France and England. Of the statute of Provisors (first passed in 1351) we have not much notice in Knighton, and the brief record of events at the end of Book V. omits any mention of its re-enactment in 1390, and also of the statute of Præmunire of 1393, though mention is made (p. 316) of attempts to evade the Mortmain Act, and of the legislation against them in 1391.

The Chronicle closes in a time of comparative peace and good government, and of these years we are supplied by Knighton with very little history. But in the times whose events he has recorded more fully we see how the excessive war taxation, together with the loosening of the bonds of society by the Black Death in Edward's reign, led up to the revolt under Richard when the poll tax affected every class of the people, and how the events of the earlier reign shaped the utterances of the rebels in every part of the Kingdom when they arose to demand their freedom.

And the troubles of which Knighton speaks so much in the middle of Richard's reign had their causes partly in the youth and weakness of the King, but were also largely the result of the rivalry and ambition of the nobles, some of them members of, and some very closely allied to, the royal line, and contributing weakness rather than ministering support to the occupant of the throne.

Cum rex Franciæ, ut supradictum est, occuparet terras regis Angliæ in Vasconia, rex Edwardus misit nuncios ad regem Franciæ petens ab eo terras suas in Vasconia[2] quæ sibi jure hereditario incumbebant, et quas progenitores sui de generatione in generationem juste[3] occupabant, et pro quibus, ut supra patet, ipse homagium regi Franciæ eidem fecerat. Brevi responso accepto, nuncii nihil in his profuerunt. Nam rex Franciæ Philippus juraverat et votum voverat, quod aut regem Angliæ penitus destrueret, aut ipsum ditissimum regem Christianitatis efficeret, aut pauperrimum redderet, et hoc totum pro causa quod rex Edwardus tantum insudaverat ad humiliationem Scotorum; et ideo miserat rex Franciæ gentem robustam in Vasconiam, et destruxit et occupavit quasi totam terram paucis castellis exceptis; sed idem rex Franciæ multos[4] perdidit de populo suo. Anno gratiæ MCCCXXXIX. circa festum Trinitatis venerunt inimici ad portum de Hastynges, et[1] incenderunt[2] magnam partem villæ, Scoti per excitationem regis Franciæ remiserunt treugas et convenerunt in marchiam Scotiæ parati intrare terram Angliæ, sed supervenerunt Angli et plures illorum ceperunt cum præda etiam mille bestiarum. Rex Franciæ videns se frustratum de malo sic inferendo in terram Angliæ, misit exercitum in Vasconiam ad destruendum confinia ejus; ibique perdidit de suis, et cæteri redierunt vacui absque expeditione sicut deus voluit. Citra festum sancti Jacobi iterum[4] venerunt Franci cum grandiori potentia ad portum de Sandewyche, scilicet cum xxxij. galeys et xx. magnis navibus et xv. minoribus navibus, sed non audebant egredi in terram propter Anglicos paratos, sed diverterunt aciem ad portum de Rye et ibi multa mala fecerunt, et Anglici de mari[4] supervenerunt, at Franci consuluerunt sibi de fuga, et Anglici insequebantur eos usque Boloniam de Nostredame et posuerunt in flammam ignis magnam partem villæ, et suspenderunt laqueo xij. de capitaniis navigii, et redierunt in Angliam cum navibus captis apud Boloniam. King Edward enters France.

In festo sancti Mathæi apostoli rex Edwardus cum duce Brabantiæ cum grandi fortitudine intravit[4] in Franciam, vendicans jus regni sibi incumbere jure hereditario ex parte matris suæ Isabellæ filiæ regis Franciæ qui masculum non habuerat, et ideo de jure consanguinitatis hereditas coronæ Franciæ regi Edwardo debebatur. Et est notandum quod rex Franciæ duas habuit[5] filias, quarum seniorem rex Naverniæ duxit in uxorem, et rex Angliæ Edwardus secundus nupsit juniorem, de qua genuit istum Edwardum tertium. Et quia iste Edwardus primo posuit clameum in regno Franciæ, et tale regnum non debet dividi inter sorores, ideo totum jus coronæ Franciæ cecidit super secundum, Edwardum regem Angliæ. Ingressus[6] rex Edwardus in Franciam, in festo scilicet sancti Mathæi, eodem die misit in flamma et igne tantam patriam de Chaumbrezyne, et tota hebdomada sequenti non cessabat ab incendio et flamma undique in illis partibus, ita quod illa patria fuit omnino destructa de bladis, bestiis et aliis quibusque similibus bonis. Sabbato sequenti venit rex Edwardus apud Markonnam quæ est inter Caumbrezyne et Franciam, et præcipit populo suo flamma comburere et dare incendio illas partes Franciæ. Et datum est intelligi Edwardo quod Philippus rex Franciæ disponeret se obviare illi apud Peronn antecedens illum. Edwardus tendit iter rectum versus eundem locum, semper præcedens populum suum destruendo et inflammando undique patriam ad spatium xij. ad minus vel xiiij. leucarum in die. Et sabbato ante festum sancti Lucæ transierunt aquam de Oyze, et hospitati sunt ibidem die Dominica sequenti, semper[1] habentes alienigenas[2] coram eis, scilicet marchiatum de Branburgh filium imperatoris, et marchiatum de Mysa filium suum legalem cum v°. armatis, ducemque Brabantiæ marescallum de Julers, et dominum de Facumberge ducem Gerle,[3] et multi alii. Et hi omnes dixerunt regi Edwardo quod eorum victualia fuerunt quasi fere consumpta et[4] expensa et hiems appropinquans esset aspera, nec se posse in tanto frigoris algore demorari; et ideo eos oportere se retrahere super marchias pro recuperatione victualium cum forent eorum victualia expensa: nam pauciora victualia secum sumpserant credentes celerius bellum ingruisse cum Philippo de Valoys qui se prætendebat regem Franciæ. Quia quotiens rex Edwardus miserat[5] nuncios ad parliamentum regis Franciæ pro pace offerenda, aliud responsum reportare non poterant nisi hoc unum, quod rex Angliæ Edwardus nunquam gauderet spatio bipedali de toto regno Franciæ; propterea credebant omnes ipsum Philippum bellum campestre eis voluisse obicere; sed non ita evenit. Et sæpius nunciis juraverat, quod rex Edwardus non moram faceret per spatium unius diei infra[6] terram regni

Die Lunæ sequenti magister albalistarum Franciæ misit literas[2] domino Hugoni de Geneve facientes mentionem quod diceret regi Angliæ ex parte regis Franciæ quod eligeret sibi talem locum campestrem qui non esset vallatus bosco, marisco aut aqua, et procederet ei in bellum citra diem Jovis proximo sequentem. Deinde venit nuncius ad dictum Hugonem ex parte regis Boemnyæ et ducis Loryngiæ habens literas sigillis eorum pendentibus munitas et continentes, quod quicquid dictus magister albalistarum ei nunciaverat ex parte regis Franciæ quoad bellum promissum, ipse rex Franciæ servaret conventionem. Igitur rex Edwardus videns dictas literas, statim mane in crastino cepit iter versus Flenymgerie,[3] ubi moram traxit tota die Veneris. Et circa vesperam capti sunt tres exploratores Franci, et sigillatim examinati dixerunt, quod die Sabbati sequenti Philippus rex Franciæ daret eis bellum in campo, et quod hospitatus est ab eis nisi per unam leucam et dimidiam. Die Sabbati rex Edwardus elegit locum suum in campo sibi et suis multum habilem in quo pugnaret; et mane eodem die capti sunt quidam discooperatores Francorum, qui dixerunt Francos in aciebus dispositos in campo, et ad congrediendum cum Anglis paratos. De quo nuncio multum læti facti sunt Anglici, et inmensa voluntate ad pugnandum exhilarati.[4] Et medio tempore quidam de nostris discooperatoribus capti sunt, inter quos miles quidam de Almanya,[5] qui arrayamentum et concupibilem voluntatem Anglorum pugnare desiderantium Francis per ordinem retulit. Qui statim primam aciem se retrahere compulerunt, et fixerunt tentoria et circumcluserunt exercitum cum fossura, et magnas arbores coram eis succiderunt ad tollendum viam Anglicis ne eis accederent. Anglici vero tota die in campo steterunt ad pedes, semper expectantes licet frustra adventum Francorum, in aciebus dispositi. Appropinquante vero vespere videbatur sapientioribus nostris quod satis de die expectaverant inimicos, et salubrius fore per lumen diei locum hospitii quærere. Sicque equos ascenderunt et iter ceperunt versus Davaneys ad unam leucam et dimidiam a rege Franciæ Philippo. Et rex Edwardus misit regi Franciæ nuncians ei quod tota die Dominica sequenti ipsum expectare vellet moram faciens in eodem loco. Quod et fecit. Et alios rumores Anglici non habuerunt de Francis quin quod die Sabbati, quando[1] Angli ceperunt equos suos recedentes de loco suo ad petendum nocturnum hospitium, crediderunt Franci ipsos velle se invadere, propterea cum tanta festinatione ad securiorem locum cum veloci cursu se dederunt, quod una vice in suo transitu per unum mariscum irrecuperabiliter unam magnam partem exercitus perdiderunt, altero super alterum irruente. Die Dominica Anglici ceperunt quendam magnum dominum, dominum de Flanyolys. Die Lunæ sequenti nunciatum est regi Edwardo quod Franci dispersi sunt et recesserunt[2] cum celeri[3] transitu singuli ad propria festinando. Tunc Marchiatus filius imperatoris cum suis sociis et dux Brabantiæ cum suis repedare se disponunt ad propria propter hiemis asperitatem. Et rex Edwardus cum suis rediit ad Andewerp.[4]

Nam die Sabbati proximo post festum sancti Michaelis arripuerunt alta maris itinera, et superveniente tempestatis molestia perpessi sunt immoderata discrimina, confractisque navibus eorum et pro majori parte populis submersis,[3] reliqua pars reagitata est ad partes terræ Flandriæ. Et sciendum quod rex Edwardus non habuit secum in illo tempore de Anglicis nisi mille ducentos de viris armatis, et octingentos viros armatos, et ij. millia sagittarios. Deinde post breve, scilicet rex et regina anno Domini MCCCXXXIX. cum cæteris Anglicis venerunt in Flandriam, ubi propter nobilitatem et audaciam regis ac ferocitatem, locutum inter Anglos et Flandros, mediante quodam vassallo nomine Jacobo de Artyngfeld Flandrico, rex Edwardus[4] cepit arma Franciæ et cum armis suis Angliæ immiscuit.[5] Et statim post hæc Flandri homagium ei fecerunt sicut domino suo recto regi Franciæ, et reddiderunt ei totam terram[6] Flandriæ. Eodem anno ipse Baliolus transivit in Scotiam [2] cum ccc. millibus hominum per Carliolum pro adquirenda hereditate regni Scotiæ, et dominus de Percy per Berwycum cum xx. millibus virorum; et cum venissent ad mare Scoticum Scoti redierunt ad pacem Balioli, et integre se dederunt ei ut regi suo. Deinde Anglici direxerunt iter suum versus villam sancti Johannis in proposito ulterius progredi in devastationem terræ Scotiæ. Sed Scoti tantum instabant, quod concessa est eis treuga usque ad festum nativitatis beatæ Mariæ, et darent regi Baliolo ix. millia librarum sub illa conditione. Ordinatumque est quod ipse Baliolus moram traheret medio tempore apud castellum de Laverok in Galweya in salva custodia pro timore Scotorum, cæteri vero Anglorum magnates redirent in auxilium regis Edwardi apud Calesiam. Modicum ante festum sancti Johannis Baptistæ, Johannes de Francia primogenitus Philippi Valoys venit prope Calesiam cum fortitudine militiæ quasi totius Franciæ, et Henricus comes Lancastriæ cum retentione videlicet viii^{c} virorum armatorum et xvi^{c} sagittariorum, cum forti manu processit in occursum ejus, æstimans campestre bellum ingruere; sed Franci se retraxerunt et inire congressum renuerunt ad patriam repedantes.

A.D. 1352. venit Coloniam, et ibi narravit coram multis magnatibus qualiter dux Oto de Bronneswyk imaginatus fuerat capere eum et ipsum impedire[1] de sua sancta peregrinatione, et tam ipsum quam suos socios, cum non deliquerit versus eum prout noverat, nec aliquam notitiam de eo habuit. Et dixit ultra, quod non decebat talem ducem usurpare de tali milite extraneo peregrinante, qui nihil male ceperat penes eum, et si cuperet habere aliquid facere cum eo reperiret eum paratum in his quæ ad militis gradum[2] pertinent. Cum igitur ista recitarentur coram duce de Bronneswyht,[3] statim absque mora quasi capitose[4] misit literas suas in Angliam ad ducem Lancastriæ sub hac forma.

Dux Lancastriæ Henricus rescripsit ei, quod certo die ad hoc assignato paratum se fore futurum, et per dei gratiam ea quæ veritas requirit suo proprio corpore defensurum. Et paravit se et perrexit Calesiam cum l. militibus et multitudine strenua.[2] Et cum appropinquaret prope Gynes occurrit ei dominus Johannes Clermont marescallus Franciæ cum pulchra multitudine[1] virorum armatorum, et recepit eum cum honore, scilicet in quindena ante natale Domini, et fecit ei conductum cum magno honore usque ad Heddyng ;[3] ubi occurrit ei dominus Jacobus de Burbon cum valida comitiva, et conduxit eum usque Parisius, et exhibuit[4] ei quantum potuit honoris et reverentiæ et omnibus suis. Et in adventu suo Parisius occurrit ei multitudo magna procerum et magnatum, cum honore eum recipientes. Et tanta affuit multitudo extraneorum civium et communium quanta nunquam illis diebus visa[5] fuerat in illa civitate, et omnes ei summum honorem exhibuerunt in suo modo. Statimque rex Franciæ misit pro eo ut veniret ad ipsum in palatio suo, et recepit eum cum magno honore. Et rex Navernyæ cognatus ducis super omnes alios grato modo se habuit penes eum, et sapienter pro eo in omnibus agebat. Ante diem prælii proceres tractaverunt inter partes, sed minime profuerunt de concordia.

A.D. 1352. dux de Bronneswyk extitit ante præstitum juramentum, quo facto contabuit et inpalluit vultus ejus. De quo conviciati sunt plures querelam suam non esse veram, aut nimis præsumptuosam. Et equum tulit vultu pallido et tristi, et, ut dicebatur, non habuit hillaritatem nec potestatem gratiose se habere in carpendo gladium, scutum, et lanceam, et cætera quæ ei attinebant, sed quasi attonitus et perturbatus defesse cuncta palpitat, et trina vice scutum suum evertebatur in accipiendo. Tandem de consilio amicorum suorum remisit querelam suam, et exuit se omnino de causa sua, committens se in alto et imo sub ordinatione regis Franciæ. Dux Lancastriæ semper astabat in loco suo, hillari vultu et eleganti, exspectans congressum sicuti decet militem pro veritate concertantem. Et mirabantur omnes de ejus stabili gestu. Et omnino recusavit omittere prælium; et dixit quod ante ingressum in listas forte potuit ad concordiam inclinari per tractatum de consilio amicorum suorum; sed postquam ingressi[2] sunt locum certaminis, equis ascensis, et cæteris paratis quæ tale negotium requirit, rege et magnatibus cunctisque populis congregatis pro veritate causæ discidenda, dedecus[3] et obprobrium esset duci Lancastriæ absque re facta de loco recedere in delusionem totius gentis Anglorum. Et dixit, se nolle locum exire pro quocunque tractatu aut concordia nisi haberet prælium, nec alio modo velle prælium dimittere nisi salvo honore suo et sanguinis sui, et legii domini sui regis Angliæ, et totius regni Anglorum in toto in quantum saltem in eo est, ita quod gens Anglorum per ipsum non incurreret crimen pudoris, sed salvus esset honor ejus in toto, nec[4] aliter gratiam expectaret quam ei conferre vellet deus.

Eodem anno post festum omnium Sanctorum venit rex Scotiæ per communem assensum regni sui ad regem Londonias, et obtulit se pergere cum eo ubicumque sibi placeret in guerra sua, si forte talis oblatio posset cedere[2] in alleviamen regni sui de tanta summa redemptionis suæ solvenda. Isto enim [2]regi Edwardo regina sua Philippa peperit Edwardum filium suum primogenitum, scilicet in festo sanctorum Viti et Modesti, regni sui anno iii.° Hic flos mundana militiæ, sub quo militare erat regnare; confligere, triumphare; cui jure maternali linea recta descendente regnum cum corona Franciæ debebatur. Iste vero Edwardus primogenitus princeps Walliæ fortunatissimus et miles in bello audacissimus inter validissima gesta militaria magnifice ab eodem peracta apud Cressy in Francia, bellum habuit contra Philippum regem Franciæ, qui Philippus associaverat sibi duos reges, scilicet Boemiæ et Malogriæ. Et isti duo reges ambo in eodem bello a prædicto principe Edwardo interfecti sunt; regem vero Franciæ Philippum in fugam vertit, magnamque stragem inimicorum fecit, captivosque plurimos de magnatibus Franciæ in Angliam secum adduxit.[3] Johannem quoque regem Franciæ similiter apud Peyters[4] debellavit, et pluribus, Isti benigno abbati Willelmo deus tantam gratiam in oculis omnium tam dominorum quam aliorum contulit, quod vix erat aliquis qui ei quod petebat negaret. In tantum enim affabilis erat domino regi, quod burdando petebat a rege nundinas sibi concedi pro leporariis[4] et aliis canibus cujuscunque conditionis essent emendis et vendendis. Rex vero credens ipsum nundinas affectuose petisse, ei concessit quod petebat, abbas[5] vero noluit instare circa negotium. In venatione leporum inter omnes regni dominos famosissimus et nominatissimus habebatur, ita ut ipse rex, et princeps filius ejus Edwardus, et plures domini de regno cum eo retenti erant sub annua pensione leporare. Ipse tamen sæpius voluit asserere in secretis, se non delectasse in hujusmodi frivolis venationibus nisi solum pro obsequiis dominis regni præstandis, et affabilitate eorum captanda et gratiam in suis negotiis adipiscenda.

Communes vero disposuerunt se interficere archiepiscopum et cæteros prænominatos cum eo, et ad hoc ibidem venerunt, et postea votum suum impleverunt. Volens igitur rex archiepiscopum et socios suos de ore luporum liberare, misit ad communes, mandans eis, ut ad locum qui Myltros[3] vocatur extra civitatem convenirent cum rege locuturi, et de eorum proposito tractaturi. Milites vero qui ituri erant cordis strenuitatem quasi tabescentes vecorditer amiserunt, et mentis audaciam, quod dolendum est, sub calle dederunt, nec egredi quasi timore femineo percussi ullatenus audebant, sed se in Turri continebant. Dum hæc sic agerentur, ecce degeneres filii remanentes patrem suum archiepiscopum cum sociis antedictis absque vi vel impetu, absque gladio vel sagitta, vel quacunque alia oppressione, sed solum verbis minacibus et clamore turbido evocaverunt, et ad mortem invitaverunt, qui sponte non reclamantes, non reluctantes tanquam agni coram tondente se nudipedes, capite discooperto, cingulis abjectis, acsi homicidio vel furto rei, et sic vindictam meriti essent, libere se morti indebite obtulerunt.[1] Et sic, heu pro dolor! duo luciferi regni, indigni cum dignis, antequam rex reveniret super le Tourehyll decollati sunt, septem in numero. Nam Johannes Leg et iii. socii ejus, ut antedictum est, causa fuerunt istius irrecuperabilis damni. Capita vero illorum in lanceis et baculis transfixerunt ut a reliquis sic dinoscerentur. Inde autem progredientes et inexquisita malitia invalescente iterum viam direxerunt usque ad manerium ducis Lancastriæ vocatum Sawey[2] miro structuræ tabulatu paulo ante ædificatum, quod quidem nobilissimus Henricus Lancastriæ dux primus, cujus filiam dominam Blanchiam Johannes de Gaunt desponsaverat, et sic in hæreditatem successerat, de fundamento construxit, in regno Angliæ, ut credebatur, non habens sibi simile. Quod quidem manerium isti servi diaboli subverterunt, combusserunt, et in cinerem redigerunt cum omnibus in eo inventis præter unum lectum et pauca alia quæ fuerunt per custodem abstracta quasi in eorum adventu. In illo namque manerio erant omnes thesauri dicti Johannis ducis, cum lectualibus et aliis ornamentis, cum gazis innumerabilibus, et ferencia bona sua quæ possent careri a communi cotidiano usu cum cartis et munimentis, quæ omnia, quod dolendum est, eorum furore simul perierunt. Per septem dies post hæc clamor eorum a multis ad locum accedentibus et de enormitate sceleris dolentibus auditus est, nec erat qui eos adjuvaret vel consolaretur ex omnibus caris suis. Domos quoque juratorum in civitate subverterunt, quas senes et quasi decrepiti, quod dictu mirum est, tanta agilitate ascenderunt, acsi essent ratones vel spiritu aliquo vecti. General alarm.

[1] In Leycestria venit nuncius vespere ad majorem villæ asserens eos prope esse apud Harberough[2] approximantes, cum idem profani essent Londoniis, et in crastino circa horam primam diei in villam Leycestriæ fore venturos ad destruendum manerium ducis Lancastriæ ibidem, et omnia bona ejus ibidem inventa dilaceranda et evertenda atque comburenda, nam quædam habebat ibidem de cotidianis suis necessariis quia sæpius ibi fovebat familiam suam, tamen in tempore istiusmodi conflictus in marchia erat cum Scotis de negotiis regni tractaturus. Quid plura? Major inde maxime conturbatus et conterritus, et quid in casu sibi ipsi contrario faceret contremescens. Si eis resistere disponeret forte deficeret, et sic cum suis occumberet: si eos cum pace reciperet, postea eorum consentaneus dijudicaretur. Salubri usus consilio convocavit vicinos suos juratos et alios peritiores, quorum consilio eadem nocte fecit proclamationem ad altam crucem villæ, et ad iiii. portas sub nomine regis, quod unusquisque paratus esset mane seipsum et proximos defensurus. Altera quoque die fecerunt similiter ostendentes se in eodem loco, et eventum rei cum magno timore exspectantes; nam exploratores emiserant et ad explorandum de operibus eorum et eos certificandum ubi essent, et quando ad istas partes diverterent, et qualiter se disponerent ad recipiendum eos, sive cum pace sive cum pugna, nec erat aliquis eorum qui rediret nunciare eis sive bonum sive malum. Propterea magis timuerunt. Interim custos gardropiæ domini ducis rediit de Londoniis similiter metuens ne supervenirent ad destruendum si quid invenirent in castello Leycestriæ, ducis, unde cum festinatione qua potuit ea quæ invenit in castello, onustis carrectis fecit deduci ad abbathiam Leycestriæ pro salva tuitione habenda a prædictis inimicis. Cumque ibidem venissent die Martis sequenti circa meridiem, abbas nimio terrore percussus, sicut et cæteri regni, non audebat ea hospitio recipere, ne forte hujusmodi rei occasione tota abbathia detrimentum intolerabile exterminii pateretur, quia idem communes pacificum ducem Lancastriæ super omnes mortales in illo conflictu magis exosum habebant, et si ipsum invenissent absque mora ab eis periclitaretur; sicque redierunt carrectæ onustæ prout venerant, et in area ecclesiæ sanctæ Mariæ de Castro bona illa exposita sunt, divinam gubernationem, sine cujus adminiculo nihil superest, expectando. In illis diebus, ut jam ante dictum est, erat præfatus pius dux Lancastriæ Johannes in Marchia Scotiæ ad tractandum cum Scotis de negotiis regni. Quod, ut The duke of Lancaster was out of the way at the Domina Constantia ducissa Lancastriæ talibus auditis timore magno percussa cordis est, malignorumque rabiem declinare volens, et pro refugio sub alas domini sui volare desiderans, cum festinatione qua potuit iter arripuit, venitque ad Pontefractum ad castellum suum pro subsidio habenda quasi in domo propria secura. Et qui inibi erant ipsam hospitio et salvo custodire nullatenus voluerunt, sed recusaverunt ipsam cum castello sub securitate custodire. Dicebant namque se non audere: sicque desolata et quasi a propria domo cum pudore in lassitudine repulsa, eadem nocte cum lumine ceræ antequam diesceret viam septem leucarum peregit, et absque quietis refocillatione apud Knaresburgh[2] pervenit, et ibi moram fecit, donec, cessante procellosa tempestate rabidi cursus, serenitas tranquillitatis et pacis superluxit, et pius dux pacis et misericordiæ de Scotia cum honore reverteretur. Tunc ille cum omni mansuetudine et pietate dedit licentiam suis omnibus, et rogavit ut unusquisque rediret ad propria, ne detrimentum paterentur de bonis suis. At illi ab eo, veluti discipuli a Christo, relicto eo, omnes fugerunt, paucis admodum cum eo remanentibus. Similiter ei relatum est quod duo turmæ nefandorum luporum discurrebant per duas partes regni, et quælibet turba continebat decem millia electorum ad rapiendum eum, una turma per orientalem partem, et alia turma per occidentalem partem. Similiter quoque omnia quæ habebat Leycestriæ destructa erant, et castellum de Tuttebery everberatum et multa alia perpetrata, quæ de facto falsa erant. Unde non mirum esset licet cor ejus hæc horrida frangerent. Comes quoque de Northumbria invitaverat eum ad cœnam et cum eo pernoctandum. Rex vero in ejus adventu admodum lætus effectus, cum magno honore eum suscepit, atque cum omni diligentia eum confortabat, donisque largifluis, prout decuit regiam magnificentiam ad suum avunculum, hilariter honorificavit. All people are commanded to give the duke safe conduct. At last he comes to the king at Reading, and is received with all honour.

Verisimile est igitur quod nos sumus prope finem, igitur propinquiores sumus periculis novissimorum temporum quæ ventura sunt ante adventum Antichristi. Ista probat ibidem per plures auctoritates sacræ scripturæ. Relinquitur igitur quod in novissimis temporibus sumus aut illis valde propinqui, quod ostendemus per octo signa quod jam [prædicta] pericula instant. Primum enim est, Quod aliqui laborant ad mutandum Evangelium Christi in aliud Evangelium quod fore dicunt perfectius et melius et dignius, quod appellant Evangelium æternum sive Evangelium Spiritus Sancti, quo adveniente evacuabitur, ut dicunt, Evangelium Christi, ut parati sumus ostendere, in illo Evangelio maledicto. Hoc signum manifestum est quod prope est tempus Antichristi, de quo in Psalmo, Constitue, Domine, legis latorem super eos. Glossa. Antichristum pravæ legis latorem.

The third. Tertium signum est, Quod sicut in Babylone reproba, postquam visa est manus scribens, Mane, Techel Phares, cito secuta est subversio ejus, (Danielis 5,) sic in Babylone dilecta Domini, (Ysa. 21.) [id est] in ecclesia, cum jam visa sit dicta scriptura, constat quod prope sint pericula ejus. Sed ista tria verba jam visa sunt scripta in ecclesia. Scripta sunt enim in illo maledicto libro quem appellant Evangelium æternum, quod in ecclesia jam propalatum est; propter quod timendum est de subversione ecclesiæ. Mane, ut exponitur Danielis 5., numeratur regnum ecclesiæ, scilicet Evangelium Christi, et concluditur in certo numero annorum. Techel inventum est minus habens perfectionis et dignitatis quam Evangelium æternum, quanto minus lucet luna quam sol, quanto minus valet testa quam nucleus, et multæ tales scriptæ sunt ibi comparationes quibus probatur minus valere Evangelium Christi quam Evangelium æternum. Phares ibi invenitur quod regnum ecclesiæ dividetur post prædictum tempus ab illis qui tenent Evangelium Christi, et dabitur illis qui tenent Evangelium æternum.

The fourth. Quartum signum est, Quod propinquante[2] fine seculi et adventu Antichristi quidam, qui apparebunt in ecclesia Christi[3] sanctiores et tamen facient quod displicet Christo, corrigentur per aliquos juxta visionem beati Johannis de correctione ecclesiarum, Apoc. 2 & 3. Sextum signum est, Quod propinquante consummatione seculi surgent quidam in ecclesia prædicatores commendantes semetipsos ultra mensuratum a Deo sibi populum, quia gloriabuntur in prædicando plebibus vel populis non suis. Et isti sub specie pietatis multos seducent, id est, a consiliis prælatorum ad consilia [sua][1] ducent. The sixth.

Septimum signum est, Quod propinquante consummatione seculi quidam qui videntur in ecclesia magni zelatores fidei et maxime amare Christum, dimittent Evangelium Christi et adhærebunt Evangelio æterno quod ex toto absorbet[2] fidem Christi, unde refrigescet caritas qua sermo dei custoditur. The seventh.

Octavum signum est, Quod propinquante consummatione seculi annunciabuntur in ecclesia signa propinqua consummationis, ut sic intelligant metuentes Christum prope [esse] consummationem seculi et dolorem qui erit tempore Antichristi. The eighth.

Hæc ibi in octavo capitulo et multa alia cum allegationibus sacræ scripturæ; quæ quidam applicant ad fratres mendicantes, magis tamen congruunt istis novis populis Lollardis qui mutaverunt Evangelium Christi in Evangelium æternum, id est, vulgarem linguam et communem maternam, et sic æternam, quia laicis reputatur melior et dignior quam lingua Latina. These were applied to the Mendicant Friars.

Istis et aliis ab archiepiscopo et consilio ejus consideratis, noluit archiepiscopus ea vice plenarie procedere in causa, donec deliberaret plenarius cum consilio coepiscoporum suorum, et tunc assignavit dicto magistro Johanni Wyclyf alium diem ad comparendum coram eo apud Oxoniam, ut cum consilio cleri universitatis posset luculentius procedere et finem imponere in præmissis. Igitur die statuto convenit apud Oxoniam archiepiscopus cum coepiscopis Lincolniensi, Northwycensi, Vigorniensi, Londoniensi, Salysbyriensi, Herfordensi, cum cancellario universitatis, cum multis doctoribus et pluribus aliis de clero et de populo ibidem congregato. Et præses [2] ecclesiæ fuit episcopus Londoniensis cum pluribus aliis valentibus: et post processionem prædicavit unus frater et doctor in theologia de ordine Carmelitarum qui vocabatur Kynygham; in qua prædicatione, ex præcepto et commissione archiepiscopi Cantuariensis ibi ostensa, pronunciavit publice omni populo conclusiones illas falsas fore et damnatas, quasdam ut hæreses et quasdam ut errores, et ex præostensa commissione denunciavit omnes illos excommunicatos qui eas in posterum docent et tenent, ac prædicant, vel favent et eis adhærent, et omnes audientes in posterum illas prædicatas vel doctas. Et in isto sermone præsens fuit unus venerabilis miles, nomine Cornelius Cloune,[3] qui istis conclusionibus et eas tenentibus ac docentibus maximus fautor fuerat, nec voluit pro quocumque aliter credere de sacramento altaris nisi quod ibi esset verus panis materialis secundum opinionem Wyclyfe. In crastino, scilicet in vigilia sanctæ Trinitatis iste miles ivit ad conventum fratrum prædicatorum in civitate Londoniensi pro missa audienda; et accidit quod audivit missam unius studentis de conventu illo, et in elevatione corporis Christi nihil vidit nisi sicut prius videre solebat, ita quod firmiter credidit quod ibi fuit verus panis materialis. In fractione vero hostiæ miles respexit et vidit oculo suo corporali in manibus fratris celebrantis veram carnem, crudam, et sanguinolentam divisam in tres partes. Nicholas of Hereford goes to Rome after his condemnation in England.

Cumque hæc ita agerentur videns prædictus Nicholaus Herford sic se mortis acerbitatem cum Lancastrensis ducis juvamine et verborum subtilitate evasisse, et ulterius in suis superstitiosis prædicationibus et doctrinis inanibus se non posse proficere, viditque quod non posset opiniones sive conclusiones prætactas in Anglicana ecclesia cum honore suo defendere, cum archiepiscopus Cantuariensis cum consensu et assensu coepiscoporum suorum et cleri sui eas pro falsis damnaverit atque omnes eas faventes excommunicationis vinculo innodaverit, pedem erigit, gressum dirigit, Romamque petere disposuit, et sic tandem viam arripuit. Cum igitur venisset Romam in consistorio coram papa, conclusiones antedictas proposuit, et se ab itinere longinquioris terræ fatigatum asserebat ut eas veras et irreprehensibiles contra quoscunque, cum protestatione præhabita ut usque ad mortis periclitationem defenderet. Igitur papa fecit convocationem de cœtu cardinalium et de clero, et cum consilio eorum in tam arduo negotio fecit plenam deliberationem et crebram discussionem et summam diligentiam ut veritatem investigaret in negotio tam sublimi. Discussis omnibus et articulatim discisis invenit eas a sanctis patribus damnatas, et in præsenti dignas damnari. Et sic cum consensu consistorii fecit eas damnandas et damnatas promulgari, et quasdam ut hæreses, quasdam vero ut errores, omni populo publicari.[1] Et quia gens Anglicana dicto Urbano papæ favebat et ipsum ut verum papam amplectebatur et colebat, papa, quasi vicem rependens in hac parte, noluit Angligenam licet hæresis defensorem ignis flamine consumere; sed quasi aliqualiter indulgens, ob reverentiam quam genti Anglorum gerebat, remissius cum eo, licet merito, agere voluit, perpetuo carceri tamen irremissibiliter ipso adjudicato et publice coram omni populo condemnato. Nam Clemens papa schismaticus illis diebus adhuc florebat; cumque plures magnates in processu temporis penes papam instarent pro misericordia remissionis et liberationis pro dicto Nicholao, papa fertur taliter respondisse, Sufficit ei vitam habere ut animum suum pœnitens revocet ab errore.

Lollard preaching. Opiniones[1] unius alterius quas audivi prædicatas.

Of offending ecclesiastics, and temporal lords. Quod, si persona ecclesiastica deliquerit et se non emendaverit, licitum est dominis secularibus hujusmodi radere per scapulas, scilicet caput auferre licet corona ejus de novo rasa sit et larga.

Similiter, quod si dominus temporalis deliquerit et non se emendaverit, licitum est popularibus ipsum corrigere.

On prayers. Die quadam palmarum prædicavit, Quod multiplicare voces labiorum in oratione scilicet blaber with thi lyppus, Anglice, nihil est. Twys. col. 2658.

On payments for religious services. Quod dare denarios pro psalteriis dicendis nihil est.

Quod, dare denarios pro missis celebrandis nisi bene vixerit nihil est; quod si bene vixerit semper orat, et quod sufficit ad orationem bene vivere.

Of the nature of Christ's passion. Similiter ibidem prædicavit, Quod pœna Christi quam sustinuit in passione fuit major quam tota pœna inferni.

Against begging friars. In eodem sermone, Quod Christus nunquam mandavit aliquem mendicare. Item quod prædicavit in aliis locis.

Against vows of poverty. Item, quod Christus nunquam expressit in sacra scriptura quod voluit quod homo relinqueret omnia sua temporalia nihil sibi retinendo. Fasc. Ziz. 413.

Item, omne Christi consilium est præceptum.

Item, nullus debet dare eleemosynam alicui qui habet meliores pannos et meliores domos quam sic conferens.

Of preaching prelates. Item, nullus est vere prælatus nec habilis ad prælatiam nisi sit doctor et prædicator.

---

[1] This short title is written as a marginal note in both MSS.

Item, quilibet absolutus a peccato est in gratia, et in tanta gratia quod non est capax majoris. A.D. 1382.

Item, quod iste habuit auctoritatem confessandi et communicandi parochianos ecclesiarum Leycestriæ, sine licentia vicariorum, ratione rectoriæ dictarum ecclesiarum.

Item, denarius confessionum est maledictus, et tam conferens quam recipiens excommunicatus.

Item, nullus debet dare eleemosynam alicui quem noverit esset malum.

Item, nulli viri ecclesiastici plus habere debent quam nudum victum et vestitum. Ecclesiastics should be poor.

Item, propter peccatum noviter commissum omnia peccata prius dimissa redeunt.

Item, prædicatores sacculos portantes sunt falsi prædicatores cum Christus in Evangelio oppositum præcipiat, nec veri prædicatores Christi discipuli hoc fecerunt.

Item, mendicitas valentium laborare est reprobata in jure civili, et non invenitur a lege evangelica approbata. Against sturdy beggars.

Item, Christus multos de diversis statubus convertit ad fidem, sed non invenitur in scriptura sacra quod umquam convertit sacerdotem. Christ never converted a priest.

Similiter, frequenter asseruit in prædicationibus suis, quod populus fuit deceptus istis ducentis annis postquam istæ novæ sectæ intraverunt per falsos prædicatores, adulatores, Antichristi discipulos, sed ipse eundem populum reformaret per suam veram prædicationem. Deceits of false preachers.

Similiter, frequenter dixit in suis prædicationibus, quod isti prædicatores nituntur falsificare sacram scripturam, dicentes et concedentes, ut ipsemet sæpius audivit publice Oxoniæ, quod ipsa est plena de hæresibus. Et causa[1] istius falsæ assertionis, ut dixit, quia sacra scriptura fuit contra vitam illorum, et ideo ad defendendum vitam illorum malam hoc asseruerunt. They say the scripture is full of heresies.

Of the preaching of John Aston.

Item, magister Johannes de Aston nominatissimus, qui refocillamen corporis postponens, vehiculum equorum non requisivit sed pedestris effectus, cum baculo incedens, ubique ecclesias regni cum veneni ampulla indefesse cursitando visitavit, ne equi paratio aut tempus pastus impedimentum itineris aut tardationem inceptæ voluntatis quandoque ei ministraret, sed, sicut canis de accubitu resiliens, paratus sub parvo sonitu ad latrandum; sic expedite ipse viam carperet velut apis argumentosus prompte ad dogmatizandum. Opiniones quoque magistri sui Wyclyf modo audaci pro suo posse ad mensam simplicium cordium dedit, ut cum usuris insanæ doctrinæ et incrementis sectæ suæ postea exigere posset tali blanditie etiam seductos. Nec de magistri sui conclusionibus talibus seductivis contentus, immo utique de sua nova subtili adinventione quampluplures alias adicere non erubuit; et ubique in ecclesiis regni prædicans lollium cum tritico seminavit. Hic seipsum et sectæ suæ fautores frequenter et sæpius veros prædicatores nominando maxime commendavit, et omnes quoscumque alios prædicatores falsos prædicatores totiens recitavit. Et quascunque opiniones aliquis hujus sectæ adinvenerit, reliqui hujus sectæ illas approbaverunt et pro veris prædicaverunt et latius divulgaverunt. Idemque magister Johannes quadam die palmarum apud Leycestriam prædicavit multas opiniones magistri Johannis Wyclyfe, et inter cæteras istas.

Item, Viri ecclesiastici, dummodo vixerint in divitiis et voluptatibus, sicut jam vivunt, sunt inhabiles ad orandum pro populo, pro quo fine fuerunt principaliter instituti. Against wealthy ecclesiastics.

Item, si rex haberet in manu sua temporalia virorum ecclesiasticorum non oporteret eum tunc accipere tallagia nec communitatem regni spoliare.

Item, Quod istæ novæ sectæ, quasi hesterno die venerunt, asserunt vitam suam et religionem perfectiorem quam religionem Christi communem et apostolorum.

Item, Beatus Paulus adquisivit manibus suis victum pro se et discipulis suis, et sic deberent religiosi manibus suis laborare et non publice mendicare. St. Paul's example.

Item, Quod sacramento altaris post consecrationem est verus panis et verum corpus Christi, et illa rotunditas quæ videtur et albedo et hujusmodi sunt panis: et hæc est sententia apostoli et doctorum antiquorum et sanctorum: et in ista materia doctores novelli vel contradicunt inter se vel non dant sufficientem istius sacramenti descriptionem. Against transubstantiation.

Item, Religiosi prædicantes, qui nolunt dicere populo et scribere veram descriptionem istius sacramenti, et fidem fundatam in Evangelio et in sacra scriptura, sunt excommunicati et hæretici: et si quis talibus eleemosynam suam dederit ipse est fautor illorum et cum ipsis excommunicatus.

Item, Fratres verecundanter dicere fidem suam de sacramento altaris, et pro confirmatione omnium dictorum suorum dixit quod hæc est fides quam deberent habere ex Evangelio et dictis apostolorum; et si quis oppositum prædicatorum diceret vel prædicaret quod

Item, quod prædicavit in Gloucestria in festo sancti Matthæi apostoli, Quod episcopi accipientes pecuniam pro peccatis sunt filii diaboli.

Against the crusade of the bishop of Norwich.

Item, Quod inter omnia facta quæ unquam fuerunt reputat statum cruciatæ malignissimum. Nam illis diebus episcopus Norwycensis habuit cruciatam in Flandriam contra Antipapam.

Item, Promoventes causam cruciatæ sunt fures.

Item, Promoventes cruciatam inducunt Christianos ad conferendum bona ad occidendum homines. Nam illis temporibus episcopus Norwycensis habuit cruciatam concessam sibi a papa Urbano in regnum Franciæ contra Antipapam Clementem, (nam Franci eidem Clementi adhærebant), et duxit cruciatam in Flandriam et non ulterius sed rediit.

Item, idem in eodem loco et tempore, Quod concedentes participationem omnium bonorum suorum spiritualium sunt blasphemi.

Of Christ's example of humility.

Item, Quod Christus natus fuit in stabulo et mortuus in cruce ad reprobandum castra Cayni, scilicet ecclesias et domos altas religiosorum et ecclesiasticorum.

Sicque a vulgo Wyclyff discipuli et Wyclyviani sive Lollardi vocati sunt. Ad sectam suam plures ac plures lucrifacerent sic inaniter deceptos. Principales pseudo-Lollardi prima introductione hujus sectæ nefandæ vestibus de russeto utebantur pro majore parte, illorum quasi simplicitatem cordis ostendentes exterius, ut sic mentes intuentium se subtiliter sibi attraherent, et laborem docendi atque seminandi insanam doctrinam securius aggrederentur. Vestimentum ovium congrue dici potest quod ab ove tonditur et sub alio colore non intingitur; unde vestimentum ovium similitudo innocentiæ et justitiæ, quam prætendebant, dici potest, sed a fructibus, hoc est ab operibus, manifestis doctrinis scilicet errorum et invidiosis detractionibus sanctitatis dulcedinem et veritatis suavitatem exterius superinduunt, et detractionum [1] acerbitate eis non adhærentes indesinenter lacerant et cruentant. Simulare quidem potuerunt,[2] sed fructum bonitatis non attulerunt, finxeruntque se integræ fidei et doctrinæ, cum tamen eorum doctrina erroribus plena turpiter repugnaret fidei catholicæ. Et vix invenires quemquam fiduciam habentem in quoquam, etiam in fratre suo uterino, quin crederent alterutros mutuo se decepturos. Et verisimile est quod post stabilitam ecclesiam tanta diffidentia, discordia et dissensio in illis partibus nunquam audita vel visa est. Sicque Wyclýf discipuli ubique a ceteris vocati sunt. Et nomen non incongrue sibi asciverunt. Nam sicut magister eorum Wyclyf potens erat et validus in disputationibus super cæteros, et in argumentis nulli credebatur secundus: sic isti licet recenter ad sectam illam attracti nimis efficiebantur eloquentes, in omnibus versutiis atque verbosis colluctationibus cæteris prævalentes; validi in verbis; in garulis fortes; in sermocinationibus præpotentes, in litigiosis deceptationibus omnes superclamantes. Et sic quod non poterant recta ratione quasi pugnanti impetuositate cum voce clamosa et turbida et altisonis verbis supplebant. Adeo ut non Christi servi humiles, mansueti, mites et patientes, immo potius Machumeti suspicarentur discipuli qui legem suam discutere prohibuit suis sequacibus, sed certius bellaci fortitudine eam defendere præcepit et pro ea pugnare. Et sic per publicam detractionem et invidiosam reprehensionem seipsos commendabant hominibus, licet non deo, et fratrum mendicantium statum in multis maxime denigrabant, nam fratres per istorum doctrinam et exhortationem[1] illis diebus exosi multis habebantur, et Wyclyviani ex eo audaciores inde effecti innitebantur avertere magis animos populorum ab eis et ipsos impedire ne prædicarent et ne mendicarent, asserentes tam dantes quam accipientes esse excommunicatos, sed eos debere manuum labore more Apostoli Pauli victum et vestitum adquirere. Erat quoque illis diebus apud Leycestriam quidam sacerdos Willelmus de Swyndurby, quem Willelmum heremitam vulgus vocabant, eo quod heremiticam vitam aliquamdiu ibidem colebat. Hic unde venerit aut ubi originem duxerit non occurrit. Sed hoc unum notabile[1] quia inconstans vita et moribus repertus est, nam multos gradus vivendi temptavit, et de gradu in gradum saltavit,[2] nullusque ei placabilis repertus est satis. In primo adventu suo vitam communem in villa ducens inter homines conversatus est. Cœpitque prædicare et initium prædicationis suæ de mulierum defectibus et superbia sumere. Nam ornatum mulierum multum despiciebat, superbiamque et actus earum aspernabatur, lasciviasque earum detestabatur; et quamvis bene agebat tamen nimis importune de hac materia tractabat quia finem facere nesciebat, sicuti nec in quacunque alia materia quam in prædicatione tangebat. In tantum namque mulieres villæ tam bonas et graves quam alias per improbitatem prædicationis et reprehensionis in iram provocaverat ut ipsum lapidibus impetere et de villa lapidare proposuerunt. Videns igitur quod sic prædicando nihil profecit, nec grates[3] reportabat sed magis seditionem excitabat, cessit materiæ, et ad mercatores et divites stilum prædicationis vertit, frequenter asserens in suis prædicationibus, neminem posse habere divitias hujus seculi et affluentiam temporalium bonorum et consequi

Tunc vitam communem voluit mutare in vitam solitariam,[1] quia prædicatio ejus nihil ei profuit ad laudem, heremitoriumque in bosco domini ducis petiit, ibique domum hanc aliquanto tempore coluit, discurrendo quandoque in villam, quandoque in patriam. Cumque devoti Leycestriæ sperantes ejus sanctitatem victualia ei ex more transmittere curaverunt, ipse sanctitatem prætendens, et quasi de suo proprio si quid sibi in seculo reservaverat contentus, hujusmodi exennia et dona recusavit et remisit, et dixit, sibi sufficere ad sustentationem paucula quæ habebat cum juvamine domini ducis. Nam dominus dux eum juvabat ad sustentationem. Cumque ibidem moram per modicum tempus traheret et panis alimonia in sistarchia deficere cœpisset, similiter et ipse de tali vita insolita de die in diem tepesceret, de vita sua eum fastidivit, et ad villam unde venerat præ pudore redire non valuit. Medio tempore honestiori modo, quo potuit, procuravit ut in abbathia ibidem pro tempore susciperetur. Quod et factum est; nam canonici ipsum Christum Domini credentes, in quadam camera infra ecclesiam ipsum receperunt propter sanctitatem quam sperabant in eo, et ei ex more aliorum sacerdotum procuraverunt victum cum pensione. Illo tempore ecclesias in patria ubique non in villa prædicando visitavit; sicque inconstantiam mentis ostendens, de mora sua lassus, vix calefactis lateribus, abire ut aliam vitam ducere posset cupiebat. Associavit sibi quendam Willelmum Smyth, de quo superius sit mentio, cum quo ad quandam capellam S. Johannis Baptistæ prope mansionem leprosorum abiit, et ibi alios de secta Wyclyf sibi associaverunt. Nam secta illa in maximo honore illis diebus habebatur, et in tantum multiplicata fuit, quod vix duos videres in via quin alter eorum discipulus Wyclyffe fuerit. A.D. 1382.

Videns prædictus Willelmus quia ex solito modo prædicandi grates populi non habuit, nec laicis et secularibus[1] placuit neque fructum augmentationis ad sectam suam adduxit, direxit sermonem contra libertates ecclesiæ et contra ecclesiasticas personas, et innitebatur quantum potuit vel ymaginate potuit viros ecclesiæ et eorum famam denigrare, asserens eos impudice vivere et bona ecclesiæ male sumere et pejus expendere; et frequenter prædicabat, sicuti et cæteri de secta sua faciebant, ut superius patet, quod parochiani non tenentur dare decimas suas et oblationes suis curatis si caste non viverent, cum aliis moribus compositis, sicut decet dei sacerdotes, ac etiam si in parochia moram non trahant, et ibi bona ecclesiæ expendant ubi ea assumunt. Similiter si insufficientes essent in scientia vel lingua impediores, quod prædicare[2] vel parochianos competenter docere non possent, sed possent parochiani decimas et oblationes retinere et quibuscunque ad libitum dare. Docebant enim cæteri discipuli Wyclyf, quod decimæ sunt meræ eleemosynæ, et ideo possent dare eleemosynam cuicumque vellent. Et si non subtraxerint decimas ab hujusmodi male viventibus, etiam fautores criminis essent et consentientes eorum malis operibus. Item prædicabat, quod homines possunt debita sua cum caritate petere a suis debitoribus, sed nullo modo aliquem propter debita inplacitare, [aut] incarcerare. Item, quod curatus malus subditos excommunicans pro decimarum detentione, pecuniam ab eis indebite et male extorquet. Item, nullus vivens contra legem dei Stabat autem unum par molarum ad vendendum extra capellam in alta strata, et dictus Willelmus ibidem inter illos lapides paravit sibi pulpitum, et convocavit populum, atque ibi pluries in contemptum episcopi prædicavit, dicens, Se posse et velle in strata regia, invitis dentibus episcopi, prædicare, dum tamen benevolentiam populi obtineret. Tunc videres populorum turbas ex omni parte, tam de villa quam de patria copiosius solito, quasi in duplo, ad ejus prædicationem ruere post talem inhibitionem et sententiam excommunicationis tam in abbathia quam in multis aliis ecclesiis. Interim dominus episcopus Lincolniensis eum citavit ad comparendum in ecclesia cathedrali Lincolniensi. Octavus error, Quilibet sacerdos potest, habita contritione, quemlibet peccatorem absolvere, et, non obstante prohibitione episcopi, tenetur evangelium populo prædicare.

Fasc. Ziz. 339. Nonus error, Quod sacerdos recipiens aliquid pro annuali ex pacto, eo ipso symoniacus est et excommunicatus.

Decimus error, Credit firmiter, ut asserit, quod quilibet sacerdos existens in mortali peccato si ponat [se] [2] ad conficiendum corpus Christi, potius committit idolatriam quam conficit.

Undecimus error nimis diffamatorius, Nullus sacerdos in aliquam domum intrat nisi ad male tractandum uxorem, filiam aut ancillam, et ideo rogabat ut mariti caveant ne sacerdotem aliquem in domum suam intrare permittant.

Dominus Henricus le Spenser episcopus Norwicensis perrexit cum cruciata contra adhærentes papæ Clementi. Nam Francia, Scotia, Flandria, et multæ aliæ nationes favebant, et adhærebant antipapæ prædicto. Collegerat namque dictus episcopus innumerabilem et incredibilem summam pecuniæ auri et argenti, atque jocalium, monilium, annulorum, discorum, peciarum, cocliarium, et aliorum ornamentorum, et præcipue de dominabus et aliis mulieribus, nam dicebatur quod unica domina ei contribuit c. libras. Et sic aliæ, quædam majus, aliæ minus. Et quamplures ultra suum posse, ut credebatur, ut beneficium absolutionis consequerentur pro se et suis benevolis amicis. Et sic secretus thesaurus regni qui in manibus erat mulierum periclitatus est. Et sic faciebant tam viri quam mulieres, divites et pauperes, secundum facultatem bonorum suorum et ultra, ut sic tam amici eorum defuncti quam ipsi a suis delictis absolverentur. Nam aliter non absolvebantur nisi tribuerent secundum posse suum et facultatem suam. Et multi inveniebant viros armatos sumptibus suis, multi sagittarios propriis expensis, et multi ibant in propriis personis et sumptibus. Habuit namque prædictus episcopus indulgentias mirabiles cum absolutione a pœna et a culpa pro dicta cruciata a papa Urbano sexto ei concessas, cujus auctoritate tam mortuos quam vivos, ex quorum parte contributio sufficiens fiebat, per se et suos commissarios a pœna et culpa absolvebat. Dicebatur enim quod quidam de commissariis suis asserebant, quod ad eorum præceptum angeli de cælo descenderent, et animas in purgatoriis locis positas de pœnis eriperent, et ad cœlos absque mora deducerent. Episcopus igitur primo aciem exercitus sui direxit in Flandriam, ubi cum venisset debellavit villas de Graflinge,[1] Burborgh cum castello, Barwe, Dunchirche, castellum de Dryngham,[2] castellum de Casselys, Nuport, Dicsmyt, Popryne, ecclesiam sancti Georgii munitam, Forne et multas alias non munitas, et cepit eas et tenuit. Cum igitur esset apud Dunchirche, congregati sunt viri ad eum in pugnam, et pugnavit cum eis et devicit et in fugam vertit, et plures cepit, et circiter tria millia occidit. Et obsedit villam de Ypres magno tempore, et oppugnavit eam et multos insultus ei fecit sed semper reverberatus erat. Tandem ipso inconsulto et nesciente exercitus ejus recessit ab obsidione et defluxit ab eo, posuerat enim unam machinam magnam et unum trepget cum una magna gunna, vocata gunna Cantuariensis, contra unam turrim super unam portam, et his ibidem relictis cum duobus curriculis onustis cum utensilibus et aliis necessariis suis, ipse secutus est suos, subclamante populo villæ qui inibi erat super eum, et clamore magno perstrepente. Igitur episcopus sic recedens ab obsidione, recepit se in villam de Dunchirche cum multis aliis de populo suo. Dominus Thomas Tryvet hospitatus est cum multis aliis in villa de Burborgh, et fortificaverunt villam cum palo et fossa. Insuper subito supervenit rex Franciæ cum regali potentia, et accessit

Villa vero cremante fiebat insultus ad palum usque ad vesperam; sed bene reverberati recesserunt Franci vice illa. In crastino misit rex Franciæ ad eos qui inibi erant ut redderent villam, et fertur dominum Thomam Tryvet talem dedisse responsum, Si rex Franciæ continuare vellet insultus contra eos per se et suos, ut prius cœperat, per xiv. dies sequentes, invenire deberet paratos pauculos Angligenas, ibidem quasi in parvo clausulo positos ipsum et suos more Anglicano potenter repulsuros. Et ipsum regratiabatur eo quod tam nobilis rex tam grandi potentia paucos viros Anglicanæ nationis tanto honore prædonaverat, bellandi gratia visitando. Cumque sub tractandi forma tempus per aliquot dies tardarent, et se non posse cum tanta multitudine contendere nec valere considerarent, reddere villam concesserunt sub conditione eis a rege concessa quod libere abire possent absque damno suorum cum equis et armis et aliis bonis suis. Dux Britanniæ ibidem cum rege Franciæ fuit qui fidelissimus amicus genti Anglorum pro suo posse in occulto extiterat. Qui in quantum potuit apud regem procuravit ut eis absque damno talem concederet conductum; et aliter non evasisset nec unus quidem Anglus, nam pauci de eis remanserant; et tunc forisfecit suum comitatum erga regem Angliæ quia venit cum rege Franciæ contra Anglos. Nam distulit solutionem donec coacti fuerunt de necessitate reddere villam, sub conditione tamen quod vivere possent sub legibus suis propriis antiquis, et quod rex non intraret villam nisi cum certo numero virorum armatorum.

mense Junii venit de Francia cum ccc. navibus bene onustis, armatorum manu, in Scotiam in auxilium Scotorum contra regem Angliæ, mansitque ibi usque post festum sancti Michaelis. Richardus vero rex Angliæ credens eos nolle recedere absque re belli, cum tam fortes essent tam de Scotis quam de suis, præmisit pium ducem Lancastriæ Johannem et alios comites, et dominos ad custodiendum partes Marchiæ usque ad adventum suum. Venit igitur rex per Leycestriam, in festo translationis sancti Thomæ martyris, et regina cum eo, quem comitabatur, præcesserat et sequebatur flos militiæ Angliæ, comitum, baronum, militum, armigerorum, valettorum, neque suæ ætati neque suæ paupertati respectum habentes pro expensis, sed hoc solum desiderantes ut tantæ diei eventui in bello interessent, incassum, nam hostes videntes tam floridum populum contra se venire, subtraxerunt se, a latere se elongantes; rex vero insecutus est eos in Scotiano, fugando de patria in patriam circiter per viginti dies in terra Scotiæ. Et villam de Ednesburgh succendit igni et villulas multas et domos, boscos quoque et forestas succidit et ignis pabulum fecit. Abbathias quoque de Mewrose et de Edyngburgh cum villa destruxit et succendit ; et non sine merito. Nam rex misericordia et reverentia erga dei ecclesiam motus, tum pietate erga deum tum quia primo tunc arma contra hostes tulerat, ecclesiasticæ libertati favere studuit et ecclesiæ damna inferre noluit. Sed in signum pacis omnibus suis misit vexillum, et poni jussit super portas abbathiarum Mewrose et Newbotyl, pacem et clementiam omnibus prætendens. Unde Anglici audacius et sine trepidatione ingrediebantur et egrediebantur, nec damnum intulerunt nec malum timuerunt. Postea autem multitudine Anglicorum recedente, retro manserunt quidam Anglici et ibidem interfecti postea inventi fuerunt. Quod rex intelligens iracundia nimis motus est. Et pacem mutavit in iram et misericordiam in vindictam, tuncque jussit utrasque abbathias destrui et igne succendi. Et dum rex sic ageret in marchia orientali intraverunt Scoti in marchia occidentali, et incenderunt partem villæ de Pennerythe et ad villam de Carleyl [1] insultum fecerunt, sed, ut dicebatur et credebatur, miraculo territi fugerunt. Nam occurrens mulier nunciavit regem Angliæ venire cum exercitu suo, at illi prospicientes, videbatur illis vexillum regis prodire, et sic pertæsi, relictis scalis ad murum et machinis, fugerunt. Mulier autem illa credebatur gloriosa virgo Maria, patrona de Carleyl,[1] quæ sæpe parata est colonis de Carleyl.[1]

Prior vero sancti Jacobi rogabat pium ducem ut ipse posset facere primum insultum contra bastile, et bene reverberatus cum suis quievit. Similiter et plures alii, feceruntque insultum per duos dies et amplius. Et suffodientes murum sub una turri, cecidit turris super dominum Robertum de Swynarton militem strenuum de comitatu Staffordiæ cum multis aliis et Johannem de Bolton strenuissimum armigerum de comitatu Eboraci. Et qui inibi erant super turrim similiter ceciderunt et statim occisi sunt.

Ricardus comes de Arundell marisarchus[1], associato sibi comite de Devenschyre et comite de Notyngamia tunc juvene, circa festum Annunciationis beatæ Mariæ audito quod navigium Franciæ et Flandriæ diverteret se de la Rochel, cum vino, festinato classe exivit in occursum eorum, et magnanimiter debellans in fugam vertit, et cepit lvi. naves cum vino. Et istis navibus in Angliam sub custodia transmissis ipse cum sociis insequebatur inimicos et iterum fortiter pugnavit cum eis, expugnatisque illis cepit sexaginta decem naves cum vino. Summa navium captarum centum viginti sex. In quibus æstimabatur de vino de Rochel quasi in duodecim et tresdecim milia vasorum. Similiter in prædicto conflictu captus est marisarchus Flandriæ cum multis aliis. Interim rediit marisarchus in Angliam cum sociis suis ad refocillandum se et suos, letaliter pro magna parte læsos et vulneratos, et post paululum rediit ad mare revigoratus pluribus novis hominibus, et direxit aciem navigii sui versus Britanniam ad villam de Brest jam secundo per ducem Britanniæ obsessam. Dux Britanniæ fecerat unum bastile de meremio a parte maris ad retrahendum eis subsidium victualium ex parte aquæ et duo bastilia de lapide a parte terræ ad retrahendum eis subsidium ex illa parte. Veniens igitur ibi dictus comes de Arundell, primo cepit bastile super aquam, fregit et funditus subvertit, et unum bastile super terram cepit et funditus dilapidavit, villamque de victualibus quæ in eis erant pro biennio sequenti luculenter instauravit, et Et ascendens in terram spoliavit, vastavit, et incendio tradidit, quasi per decem leucas, regionem. Interim dominus [2] Hugo le Dyspenser, volens ulterius in portu conscendere in navi cum suis et refluente aqua et deficiente quasi infortune, captus est, ductusque est Parisius ad regem Franciæ. Dominica igitur sequenti venit rex in aulam Westmonasterii et sedit in solio regali, et tota domus erat repleta dominis magnatibus et communibus, et rex exspectabat eorum adventum quasi per spatium fere duarum horarum. Nam relatum erat duci et comitibus quod insidiæ positæ essent per viam apud le Mewes et in hospitio archiepiscopi Eboracensis ut eos raperent, et ideo lustratis his et aliis locis suspectis tandem venerunt ad præsentiam regis, comitantibus illos multis dominis magnatibus et communibus. Cumque intrassent in atrium videntes regem flexis genibus salutaverunt eum, et cum venisset ad pedem graduum iterum genuflexo adoraverunt eum. At ille innuit eis manu ut accederent, tunc ascenderunt summum graduum et tunc tertio genu flexo salutaverunt regem. Rex vero reverenter assurrexit eis, et singulis manu ad manum receptis, ut moris erat illo tempore in adventu amici ad amicum, iterum residebat. Tunc illi se integraliter excusabant erga regem et personam regis nihil mali imaginasse vel excogitasse, causamque gravaminis sui erga quinque proditores regi referebant, et in scriptis indentatis plenarie de materia regi tradiderunt. Inde rex publice promisit eis, quod faceret illos quinque comparere in proximo parliamento sequenti et stare judicio legum regni et [præfixit eis

The favourites appeal to the king, and say they are in special peril.

Interim quidam istorum nefandorum prædonum accesserunt ad regem ingenti audacia dicentes se in maximo vacillo vitæ et mortis non pro se sed pro regis commodo positos erga magnates et dominos regni, cum rex promisisset se producturum eos et alios in proximo parliamento tam prope præfixo, quia illud fieri non posset cum honore regis pro cujus amore talia pericula subire deberent; nam dicebant se non audere nec posse nec velle exponere corpora sua ad tam evidentes mortis metas. Rex ista considerans retraxit se a consilio suo quod tunc Londoniis assignatum erat pro parliamento et his quæ ad parliamentum necessitanter prævidendis, sicque consilium istud cum proposito habendi parliamentum dilatum est et quassatum. Interea prædones isti a latere regis cum maximo pavore recesserunt, et in diversas partes fugerunt.[1] Alexander archiepiscopus Eboracensis relicto cariagio et omnibus aliis bonis suis cum paucis viris in forma simplicis sacerdotis, ut dicebatur, partes boriales quam magna festinatione petiit. Robertus Veer dux[2] Hiberniæ, ut fertur, cum arcu et sagittis in pharetra in forma valetti cum quinque aliis valettis simili schemate Cestriam fugit, Michael de Pole comes de Suthfolc Calesiam petiit, et ut dicebatur barbam et caput a capillis per rasuram denudavit, simulans se Flandricum pultarium cum caponibus in calatho, (id est, a panyer,)[3] cum quibus accessit ad portas castelli Calesiæ quasi volens in castello vendere capones suos. Ob quam causam rex motus est contra Willelmum Bewchamp et misit eum in custodiam, sed postea quorundam ductus consilio dimisit eum ne videretur id fieri ob causam quia noluit liberare villam Calesiæ ad jussum regis, ut præmittitur. Et Michael de Pole licentia regis abiit viam suam versus partes de Holle. Igitur rex sic viduatus a consortio suorum auricularium et præcipue ducis Hiberniæ graviter tulit, nec diu potuit sustinere sed cito misit ad ducem ut se festinaret ad eum, misitque ad Thomam Molyneux[1] qui magnæ potestatis erat illo tempore in comitatibus Lancastriæ et Cestriæ, et ad vicecomitem Cestriæ, sub secreto sigillo rogans, et misit eis etiam commissionem præcipiens ut populum congregarent et consanguineum regis et amicum specialissimum conducerent sub omni securitate ad regis præsentiam, pro labore vel expensis nullatenus omittentes. [2]Tunc iste Thomas Molyneux congregavit populos ex omni parte, et ut fertur, qui noluerunt secum ire pro zelo ducis Gloucestriæ et sociorum ejus mancipavit eos in carcerem, præcipiens custodibus eos vinculis arctari, et ut eos uno die parco pane nigro alerent, et altero die tanquam penitus mortis crudelitati adductos sola aqua contentos facerent, donec de viagio rediret. Mandavit quoque rex dominum Radulfum Vernon et dominum Radulfum de Radeclyffe et omnibus aliis magnatibus patriæ, ut assumpta fortitudine ducem regi salvo transducerent. Qui collecta multitudine circiter quinque millium virorum ire cœperunt. Quo audito dux Gloucestriæ, comes Derbeyæ, comes de Arundell, comes Warwychiæ, comes de Notyngham miserunt in omnes partes regni congregare populum suum. Tunc videres

Factique sunt quasi una persona majores et minores plebei et communes contra antedictos regni prædones, clamantes et dicentes, Deleantur de vita ne honor egregius Anglicanæ gentis per tales proditores viduetur. Videres quoque orationes mirabili aspiratione incessanter ab omnibus domi remanentibus fundi, processiones ab ecclesia devotissime frequentari, et tam senes quam juvenes ac mulieres quasi lacrimabili voce pro pace et tranquillitate regni Christi aures sollicite personare. Timebant etenim ne rex brachium auxilii sui pro duce Hiberniæ opponeret contra dominos et communes, quod et ante, ut supra patet, fecit per commissiones, et postmodum multiplici juvamine pro suo posse faceret si se in illo proposito prodesse ullatenus videret. Nam voluntas Londoniensium stetit cum dominis et communibus, ut supra notatum est.

Fears about the action of the king.

Denique Robertus Ver dux Hiberniæ cum omni populo suo numero quasi inter quatuor et quinque mille pugnatorum venit in vigilia sancti Thomæ apostoli in comitatum Oxoniæ, tendens iter versus pontem[1] de Radecote quæ distat ab Schepyng Norton per iv. leucas. Quem pontem si forte pertransisset securus ab omni timore fuisset de omnibus inimicis suis; sed interceptus est a proposito suo. Nam comes Derbeyæ posuerat custodes ad caput pontis viros armatos et sagittarios qui transitum duci prohibuerunt, et pavimentum pontis interruperunt in tribus locis, adeo quod non potuit nisi solus eques simul pertransire, ac etiam pro majori securitate pontem in tribus locis pessulis munierunt. Cumque dux Hiberniæ sic festinaret iter suum versus pontem prædictum, non longe prospexit Henricum comitem Derbeiæ cum grandi caterva stipatum veloci gressu proximare. Statim pedem fixit, vexillum regis quod ibi paratum habuerat expandere jussit et super lanceam erigere, alacri vultu et quasi læto animo fecit tubis clangere aliisque instrumentis musicis in altum concrepare, et jocunda voce hortabatur suos paratos esse ad pugnam imminentem; quidam vero ex eis pugnare volebant, sed quidam renuerunt, dicentes, se non posse quia numero pauci respectu adversariorum, nec audere offendere certamine contra tot dominos et nobiliores totius regni, nec velle se tanto periculo mortis quoquo modo immiscere ex injusta causa. Dux Hiberniæ hæc considerans urgens equum semper antecedebat omnes festinato pede, proposuit primus pontem pertransire, et sequebantur eum populi sui. Cumque tendisset ad pavimentum pontis et vidisset illud sic fractum et armata manu sic munitum clamavit. Decepti sumus, et rediens exsiluit de equo in quo sedebat, ascendit alium cursarium volens effugere adversarios per ripam fluminis Thamesiæ. Et ecce occurrebat ex adverso dux Gloverniæ cum caterva sua multa nimis, et dux Hiberniæ sic inclusus ex una parte de aqua Thamesiæ et ex parte altera ab adversariis suis undique, et comes Derbeyæ prope aderat ad capiendum eum, commisit se fortunæ vitæ vel mortis. Et calcaribus urgens equum rejectis a se cirothecis[1] suis et gladio et aliis quæ equum suum a gravitate forsan expeditiorem redderent, immisit se in aquam Thamesiæ, et sic mirabili ausu evasit ab eis. Thomas Moleyns volens eum sequi retractus est per dominum Mortymer, a quo et interemtus est. Quidam frater de ordine Minorum confessor ejusdem ducis ibidem in quadam palude submersus est, cujus equus salvatus est et captus, cujus famulus captus est. Tunc misit rex viros apud Calesiam tractare cum Flandrensibus de concordia et pace. Et Anglici plura petierunt ab illis et concesserunt petita. Et inter cætera petierunt ab illis, quod eicerent omnes Francigenas de finibus suis deinceps cum illis non moraturos, et annuerunt hoc facere. Similiter petierunt ut castellum de Gravelyng, quod in multum nocumentum et gravamen Angligenis extiterat, penitus destruerent et funditus dilapidarent. Nam Anglici in illis partibus degentes et mercatores illuc transeuntes multa[1] mala et pericula per illud castellum perpessi sunt. Et verisimile est adhuc per dictum castellum talia sustinere, et idcirco firmam pacem haberi inter regna non posse quamdiu dictum castellum staret vel etiam per Flandros gubernaretur. Flandri vero dictum castellum evertere aut in manus Anglorum liberare renuerunt, sicque discordes abinvicem abierunt. Interea, ut fertur, quasi infra proximum mensem orta est gravis dissensio in Flandria[2] inter Flandros et Francos inter eos cohabitantes, adeo, ut dicebatur, quod uno die et uno tempore diei quasi in tribus horis occisi sunt de Francis et Flandris eis faventibus circiter xvi. milia virorum in tribus civitatibus, videlicet in[3] Gaunt, Yprys, et Andewerpus.

Tunc medio tempore dominus Robertus [3] Veere, dominus Alexander Nevill archiepiscopus Eboracensis et dominus Michael de Pole comes de Suthfolc fugerant, ut supradictum est, et ad parliamentum non venerunt, et ideo exlegati sunt et omnia bona eorum, redditus et possessiones, bona mobilia et immobilia, in manus regis seisita pro se et hæredibus suis imperpetuum, exceptis his feofamentis quæ sub tallia ad hæredes provenirent.[4] Sed dominus Robertus Tressylyan capitalis justiciarius regis absconderat se in domo cujusdam apothecarii prope portam Westmonasteriensem, ut sic videret dominos et magnates regni intrantes ad parliamentum et egredientes et exploraret quid ageretur in parliamento, quia in tota vita sua semper cautelose [5] egerat, sed jam cautela ejus vertitur in summam stultitiam. captus est et per ducem Gloucestriæ in parliamento præsentatus. Eodem die post nonam distractus est de turri[1] Londoniensi per medium civitatis usque ad Tyburne ad furcas et suspensus est, gutturque ejus cæsum est, nam antea adjudicatus fuerat ad eandem mortem in eodem parliamento. Hic prædictus Robertus disfiguraverat seipsum[2] fingens se pauperem debilem in tunica hispida et dilacerata et debili, feceratque sibi barbam prolixam et longam artificiose, quam barbam barbam Parisiensem vocabant, et faciem suam exterminabat ne agnosceretur; adeo disfiguratus fuerat quod nullus eum agnovit nisi ex sola loquela. A.D. 1388. and is executed summarily.

In crastino, scilicet die Jovis, Dominus rex ipsum Nicholaum de Brembul sæpius promoverat antea in Majorem civitatis contra voluntatem multorum de civitate. Hic multas oppressiones et seditiones fecerat in civitate. De quo fertur quod dum fuerat in sua plenaria postestate[3] majoratus fieri fecit unam stipitem communem et unam securim communem ad amputandum colla sibi insurgentium et sibi adversantium. Et fertur de eo quod addictari fecerat de talibus suis adversariis potentioribus de civitate Londoniensi octo mille[4] quingentos et plures; quos omnes ut dicebatur nisi deus restitisset proposuerat decapitandos, et ut dicebatur cum eisdem instrumentis idem Nicholaus apud Tourehill decapitatus est: pro quo rex rogavit et institit[5] penes dominos parliamenti ne distraheretur aut suspenderetur. Hic si vixisset dux Troiæ factus per regem fuisset. Nam ab antiquo civitas Londoniensis Troia minor vocata[6] est; et sic dux de Londoniis esset, mutato nomine Londoniarum in nomen Troiæ. Caput vero Thomæ Uske positum est super portam de Newgate causa opprobrii parentelæ suæ quæ in illis partibus civitatis morabatur. Tertio nonarum Maii dominus Symon[3] de Burlee damnatus est de proditione ut cæteri supradicti, sed rex dispensavit cum eo de distractione et suspensione. Hic apud le Tourhyll decapitatus est. Qui de patrimonio hæreditario expendere non valuit ultra xx. marcas, sed in paucis annis in obsequio prædicti regis crevit ad ultra valorem trium mille marcarum annui proventus. Et fertur de eo dedisse ad natale Domini in liberationem militum armigerorum valettorum et aliorum, tam de curia regis quam suorum, et ubi sibi placuit quandoque centum quadraginta pannos, quandoque centum sexaginta, quandoque ccxx. magni pretii, scilicet quosdam pannos deauratos et quosdam de scarleto. Item iv° idus Maii dominus Johannes Bewchamp[4] condemnatus est distrahi suspendi et quarterizari, sed gratia regis translata est ejus damnatio in decapitationem; et sic apud Tourhull decollatus est. Dominus Jacobus Bernerys miles de curia regis de proditione et seditione eodem die eodemque[5] modo accusatus et condemnatus in eodem loco capite[6] plexus est. Summi proditores evaserunt de regno fugiendo, videlicet Alexander Nevill archiepiscopus Eboracensis, Robertus Veere dux Hiberniæ, et Mychel[1] Pole comes de Suthfolc. Isti de judicio parliamenti exlegati sunt, et de hoc editum est quoddam statutum, quod deinceps gratiam redeundi in terram Angliæ nulla mediante conditione consequerentur. Similiter exhæredati sunt et forisfecerunt omnia tenementa terras et possessiones pro se et hæredibus suis imperpetuum, his exceptis quæ sub tallia provenerunt, sicut supra plenius patet ante principium hujus parliamenti. Simili modo de cæteris qui morte plexi sunt de forisfactura tam bonorum suorum et terrarum atque possessionem pro se et hæredibus suis statutum est.

Post hæc producuntur justiciarii,[2] scilicet pridie nonarum Martii, qui in principio parliamenti arestati sunt et mancipati sub custodia tenebantur apud Turrim, videlicet dominus Robertus Belknappe, dominus Johannes Caare,[3] dominus Johannes Holte, dominus Rogerus de Fulthorp, dominus Willelmus de Burgh, et Johannes de Locton serjancius ad legem. Qui omnes pro suis demeritis, sicut supra patet ante præsens parliamentum, et similiter supra in ultima accusatione proditorum plenius continetur, videlicet in præcedenti, damnati sunt ad distractionem et suspensionem et mortem. Sed interveniente Anna regina Angliæ cum archiepiscopo Cantuariensi et aliis episcopis, rex cum consensu dominorum in quos deliquerant condonavit eis vitam.[4] Sed exhæredati sunt sicut cæteri pro se et hæredibus suis; et exlegati sunt in Hiberniam sub statuto edito nunquam redituri. Assignatique sunt bini et bini ad certa loca pro suo perpetuo mansuri, et ultra certas limites et bundas non progressuri; et assignata

[4]Anno isto fuit magna egestas in omnibus partibus Angliæ, et ista egestas seu inopia bladorum incepit sub falce, et perduravit usque ad festum S. Petri[5] ad vincula, scilicit ad nova grana. Ista inopia multum oppressit populum, et præcipue communes et pauperes; nam videres infantes et pueros in viis et domibus pro fame ejulantes et clamantes, panem petentes, nec mater habuit unde eis frangere valuit. Wals. ii. 197. Sed causa istius egestatis penuria pecuniæ multum credebatur esse apud plures, nam pecunia multum defuit illis diebus et hujus[8] maxima causa fuit quia lanæ regni dormiebant apud quosdam per biennium, et apud quosdam per triennium absque emptore; nam statutum fuerat in quodam parliamento quod mercatores Angliæ non exirent regnum cum lanis et aliis mercimoniis, sed ea adducerent ad duodecim loca infra regnum ad hoc negotium deputata, ut mercatores alienigenæ cum suis mercimoniis ad dicta loca

Twys. col. 2738. Ista egestas annonæ maxime invaluit in comitatu Leycestriæ et mediis partibus regni. Et licet egestas esset magna, pretium tamen bladorum non erat nimis excessivum. Nam quarterium frumenti in suo summo pretio vendebatur Leycestriæ pro xvi. solidis viii. denariis una vice, reliquo tempore pro una marca vel xiiii. solidis. Apud Londonias vero et in multis aliis locis regni quarterium frumenti vendebatur pro decem solidis, vel paulo majus vel paulo minus; nam confluebant xi. naves onustæ cum copia alimentorum ad diversa loca regni in relevamen populi. Sed et cives Londoniarum exponebant ii. milia marcarum in emptionem alimentorum de communi cista orphanorum. Et xxiiii. aldermanni [2] quilibet eorum apponebat xx. libras ad consimilem emptionem præ timore venturæ famis civitati et reponebant in diversis locis commodioribus et aptioribus pro populo, ut indigentes venirent et emerent sub certo pretio quantum sufficeret pro se et familia sua sustentanda, et qui non habebant pecuniam in præsenti solvere fidem facerent solutionis infra sequentem annum, sicque relevati sunt ne quis præ fame periret.

Statute against the holding of property in trust by ecclesiastics.

In isto parliamento editum est profanum statutum contra ecclesiam et ecclesiæ personas, videlicet, ne quævis personæ ecclesiasticæ possideant maneria glebas domos possessiones terras redditus quoscumque proventus per manus feoffatoris absque licentia regis et capitalium dominorum. Et istud statutum extendit se tam ad ecclesias parochiales, capellas, cantarias, quam ad abbathias, prioratus, seu quæcumque alia monasteria, similiter ad cives civitatum, et villicanos, atque burgenses burgorum et villarum hujusmodi redditus vel possessiones pro communi utilitate habentes. Nam homines in illis diebus qui volebant conferre redditus vel possessiones alicui ecclesiæ sive cuiquam communitati nec expensas possent effundere ut eos in manum mortuam reducerent sub licentia regis et capitalium dominorum, solebant feoffare certos homines in quibus habebant fiduciam, sub quorum nomine et defensione ecclesiasticæ personæ vel hujusmodi communitas rei commodo gauderent et utilitatem eorum possiderent. Et cautum est in eodem statuto, quod omnes et singuli tam personæ ecclesiasticæ quam parochiales, et cives atque burgenses, et villicani seu quicumque alii habentes hujusmodi redditus, possessiones, maneria seu quoscumque proventus in manibus talium feoffatorum sine licentia regis et capitalium dominorum, quod aut licentiam a rege et capitalibus dominis impetrarent in manum mortuam redigere vel venditioni talia exponere et suum commodum inde facere citra festum sancti Michaelis proximo sequens, vel illo festo peracto rex et capitales domini in sic non præordinatis et dispositis intrare et seisire, et ad suum placitum optinere.

Negotiations at Amiens.

pace inter regna Angliæ et Franciæ tractanda ubi occurrit ei rex Franciæ cum magno tripudio honoris et laudis præmittens primo in occursum dicti ducis cives equestres ejusdem civitatis numero pergrandi, deinde comites et barones quamplurimos, deinde avunculos suos duces. Postremo ipse rex venit ei obviam salutans eum et prænominans dignissimam personam militiæ totius Christianitatis, regali dignitate inuncta solummodo excepta; et idem dominus dux habuit xvii. dies ex conductu pro pacis forma tractanda. Deinde rediit habens in comitatu suo episcopum Dunelmiæ et filium ducis Eboracensis, comitem de Rutlondia, cum mille equitibus, ut dicebatur, mirabili apparatus elegantia refertis.[2] consilio quid agendum esset in præfatis duceret in effectum. A.D. 1392.

Item, Rex habuit grande concilium apud Notyngamiam ad festum sancti Johannis Baptistæ, in quo convenire fecit majorem Londoniarum cum xxiiii. Aldermannis et duobus Vicecomitibus, et xxiiii. in secundo gradu potentioribus civitatis. In quo convicit eos forisfecisse contra quoddam obligatorium novem milium librarum et amissione privilegiorum suorum erga regem. Quod quidem obligatorium regi ante fecerant suis demeritis illud exigentibus. Rex autem novis delictis recitatis absolvit Majorem et duos Vicecomites cæterosque officiarios de officiis suis. Et misit Majorem et duos Vicecomites ad certa loca in custodiam exuens civitatem Londoniensem omni privilegiorum honore, ita quod magis non gauderet civis quam extraneus aliquo privilegio, præficiens dominum Edwardum Baleryge[1] custodem ad custodiendum leges regis et populum in civitate Londoniensi[2] donec disponeret aliter pro eis. Et præfixit eis diem ad respondendum regi et ejus consilio super objectis et objiciendis in festo sanctæ Mariæ Magdalenæ proximo sequenti apud Wyndesoram. Interim mediantibus quibusdam amicis mitigata est erga eos pro parte indignatio regis,[3] et dimisit Majorem et Vicecomites cæterosque omnes in domos suas, præficiens tamen eis novum custodem civitatis, reservans in manu sua omnia privilegia civitatis. Interea Dominica proxima post festum Assumptionis beatæ Mariæ omnes potentiores civitatis venerunt ad regem et submiserunt se et omnia bona sua regi, et tunc primo recepit eos in suam gratiam.[4] Die vero Mercurii sequenti rex dis-

A.D. 1392. posuit se venire Londonias, et occurrerunt ei cives equestres multitudine quasi innumerabili; et qui non habebant equos dederunt [se] ei obviam pedestres; mulieres quoque et infantes se ei monstraverunt. Episcopus quoque Londoniensis cum cœtu cleri totius civitatis nullo ordine vel gradu, aut conditione vel sexu ecclesiasticæ dignitatis excusato cum ingenti honoris tripudio, et regi et reginæ processit obviam. Fertur in illa processione plusquam quingentos pueros in superpelliciis extitisse. Insuper et cives ornaverunt facies domorum et camerarum suarum per omnes vicos, plateas, et stratas quo rex et regina transituri erant a sancto Georgio usque ad Westmonasterium, saltem in dignioribus ædificiis, vestibus cultioribus, aureis et argenteis, velvetis, syndonicis sicladibus, aliisque pretiosis prout possibilitas cujuscumque attingere poterat ut ubique aquæductu in Chepa vinum rubeum et album affluenter emanante, puero quoque in vestibus albis in forma angeli cum cupa aurea desuper stante, et vinum regi et reginæ ad bibendum offerente. Interea offerunt regi unam coronam auream magni pretii, et alteram coronam auream reginæ; et post pusillum procedentes conferunt regi unam tabulam auream de Trinitate ad pretium octingentarum librarum. Similiter et reginæ aliam tabulam auream de sancta Anna quam ipsa[1] in speciali devotione habebat, eo quod ipsamet Anna vocabatur; et tantos ac tales honores et mirabiles regi impenderunt quales nulli alii regi hujus regni retroactis temporibus meminimus impensos fuisse. Sicque progredientes perduxerunt regem et reginam in aulam Westmonasteriensem. A.D. 1395. Anno Domini MCCCXCV. circa mensem Maii rex Ricardus rediit de Hibernia subpeditata terra in Angliam. Et dimisit in Hiberniam comitem Marchiæ cum multis aliis ad custodiendum terram. Et post natale Domini sequens dominus Johannes dux Lancastriæ rediit in Angliam de Vasconia et venit per Franciam. Wals. ii. 217.

The king returns from Ireland, and the duke of Lancaster from Gascony.

Rex Franciæ fecit convocationem de clero Franciæ ad investigandum potestatem duorum paparum quis eorum plenius jus haberet in cathedra Petri, nam schisma duorum paparum adhuc perseverat. Clerus vero scripsit pro Clemente papa suo Avinoniæ[4] et scriptum munierunt sigillo Parisiensis Universitatis. Quod quidem scriptum rex Franciæ Carolus transmisit Ricardo regi Angliæ ut in his dubiis delibareret cum consilio cleri sui. Igitur rex Ricardus fecit convocationem Oxoniæ de peritioribus theologis tam regentibus quam non regentibus totius regni. Qui scripserunt pro Urbano papa suo Romano, et scriptum signaculo Universitatis Oxoniensis fortificaverunt[5] regisque Ricardi, et transmiserunt Parisius regi Franciæ. CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

[Imperial 8vo., cloth. Price 15*s.* each Volume or Part.]

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although "the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized "world," and although "they are of the greatest value in a historical "and constitutional point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to "the public, from the want of proper Calendars and Indexes."

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published in this Series:—

Calendarium Genealogicum; for the Reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. Edited by Charles Roberts, Secretary of the Public Record Office. 2 Vols. 1865.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

[Royal 8vo. Price 10*s.* each Volume or Part.]

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published "under His Majesty's royal sanction, would be an undertaking honour- "able to His Majesty's reign, and conducive to the advancement of "historical and constitutional knowledge; that the House therefore "humbly besought His Majesty, that He would be graciously pleased to "give such directions as His Majesty, in His wisdom, might think fit, "for the publication of a complete edition of the ancient historians "of this realm."

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury in 1857 a plan for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. The Chronicle of England, by John Capgrave. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A. 1858.

   Capgrave's Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (being written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. Chronicon Monasterii de Abingdon. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

   This Chronicle traces the history of the monastery from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I. The author had access to the title deeds of the house, and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom.

3. Lives of Edward the Confessor. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduuardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

   The first is a poem in Norman French, probably written in 1245. The second is an anonymous poem, written between 1440 and 1450, which is mainly valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time. The third, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written between 1066 and 1074.

4. Monumenta Franciscana. Vol. I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vol. II.—De Adventu Minorum; re-edited, with additions. Chronicle of the Grey Friars. The ancient English version of the Rule of St. Francis. Abbreviatio Statutorum, 1451, &c. Edited by Richard Howlett, Barrister-at-Law. 1858, 1882.

   The first volume contains original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of St. Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers. The second volume contains materials found since the first volume was published.

5. Fasciculi Zizaniorum Magistri Johannis Wyclif cum Tritico. Ascribed to Thomas Netter, of Walden, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. Shirley, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work gives the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards.

6. The Buik of the Croniclis of Scotland; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece; by William Stewart. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. Turnbull, Barrister-at-Law. 1858.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this version.

7. Johannis Capgrave Liber de Illustribus Henricis. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A. 1858.

The first part relates only to the history of the Empire from the election of Henry I. the Fowler, to the end of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, from the accession of Henry I. in 1100, to 1446, which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

8. Historia Monasterii S. Augustini Cantuariensis, by Thomas of Elmham, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by Charles Hardwick, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191.

9. Eulogium (Historiarum sive Temporis): Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366; a monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. Haydon, B.A. 1858–1863.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of Malmesbury, about the year 1367. A continuation carries the history of England down to the year 1413.

10. Memorials of Henry the Seventh: Bernardi Andreæ Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by James Gairdner. 1858.

The contents of this volume are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet Laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Other documents of interest are given in an appendix.

11. Memorials of Henry the Fifth. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by Charles A. Cole. 1858.

12. Munimenta Gildhallæ Londoniensis; Liber Albus, Liber Custumarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I., Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Custumarum. Vol. III., Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by Henry Thomas Riley, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859–1862.

The Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the 12th, 13th, 14th, and early part of the 15th centuries. The Liber Custumarum was compiled in the early part of the 14th century during the reign of Edward II. It also gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the 12th, 13th, and early part of the 14th centuries.

13. Chronica Johannis de Oxenedes. Edited by Sir Henry Ellis, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa, it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to 1292. It is particularly valuable for notices of events in the eastern portions of the Kingdom.

14. A Collection of Political Poems and Songs relating to English History, from the Accession of Edward III. to the Reign of Henry VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Thomas Wright, M.A. 1859–1861.

15. The "Opus Tertium," "Opus Minus," &c. of Roger Bacon. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

16. Bartholomæi de Cotton, Monachi Norwicensis, Historia Anglicana; 449–1298; necnon ejusdem Liber de Achiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1859.

17. Brut y Tywysogion; or, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. John Williams ab Ithel, M.A. 1860.

This work, written in the ancient Welsh language, begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A Collection of Royal and Historical Letters during the Reign of Henry IV. 1399–1404. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

19. The Repressor of over much Blaming of the Clergy. By Reginald Pecock, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. Churchill Babington, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological disquisition of which our English prose literature can boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. His work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards, and it has great value for the philologist.

20. Annales Cambriæ. Edited by the Rev. John Williams ab Ithel, M.A. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commenced in 447, and come down to 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle used by Tigernach, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster.

21. The Works of Giraldus Cambrensis. Vols. I.–IV. Edited by the Rev. J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V.–VII. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. Vol. VIII. Edited by George F. Warner, M.A., of the Department of MSS., British Museum. 1861–1891.

These volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable for the anecdotes which they contain.

The Topographia Hibernica (in Vol. V.) is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland, the first in 1183, the second in 1185-6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. The Expugnatio Hibernica was written about 1188, and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of acts occurring in his own days. Vol. VI. contains the Itinerarium Kambriæ et Descriptio Kambriæ; and Vol. VII., the lives of S. Remigius and S. Hugh. Vol. VIII. contains the Treatise De Principum Instructione, and an Index to Vols. I.–IV. and VIII.

22. Letters and Papers illustrative of the Wars of the English in France during the Reign of Henry the Sixth, King of England. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861–1864.

23. The Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, according to the several Original Authorities. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by Benjamin Thorpe, Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In this edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography.

24. Letters and Papers illustrative of the Reigns of Richard III. and Henry VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by James Gairdner. 1861–1863.

The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III., correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. Letters of Bishop Grosseteste. Edited by the Rev. Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The letters of Robert Grosseteste range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III., but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop.

26. Descriptive Catalogue of Manuscripts relating to the History of Great Britain and Ireland. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066–1200. Vol. III.; 1200–1327. By Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, D.C.L., Deputy Keeper of the Records. 1862–1871.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. A brief analysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which original portions are distinguished from mere compilations. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. Royal and other Historical Letters illustrative of the Reign of Henry III. Vol. I., 1216–1235. Vol. II., 1236–1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. Shirley, D.D., Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862–1866.

28. Chronica Monasterii S. Albani.—1. Thomæ Walsingham Historia Anglicana; Vol. I., 1272–1381: Vol. II., 1381–1422. 2. Willelmi Rishanger Chronica et Annales, 1259-1307. 3. Johannis de Trokelowe et Henrici de Blaneforde Chronica et Annales, 1259–1296; 1307–1324; 1392–1406. 4. Gesta Abbatum Monasterii S. Albani, a Thoma Walsingham, regnante Ricardo Secundo, ejusdem Ecclesiæ Præcentore, compilata; Vol. I., 793–1290: Vol. II., 1290–1349: Vol. III., 1349–1411. 5. Johannis Amundesham, Monachi Monasterii S. Albani, ut videtur, Annales; Vols. I. and II. 6. Registra quorundam Abbatum Monasterii S. Albani, qui Sæculo XV^mo^ floruere; Vol. I., Registrum Abbatiæ Johannis Whethamstede, Abbatis Monasterii Sancti Albani, iterum susceptæ; Roberto Blakeney, Capellano, quondam adscriptum: Vol. II., Registra Johannis Whethamstede, Willelmi Albon, et Willelmi Walingforde, Abbatum Monasterii Sancti Albani, cum Appendice, continente quasdam Epistolas, a Johanne Whethamstede Conscriptas. 7. Ypodigma Neustriæ a Thoma Walsingham, quondam Monacho Monasterii S. Albani, conscriptum. Edited by Henry Thomas Riley, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1863–1876.

In the first two volumes is a History of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., by Thomas Walsingham, Precentor of St. Albans.

In the 3rd volume is a Chronicle of English History, attributed to William Rishanger, who lived in the reign of Edward I.: an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol, 1291–1292, also attributed to William Rishanger but on no sufficient ground: a short Chronicle of English History, 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand: a short Chronicle Willelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi, Regis Angliæ, with Annales Regum Angliæ, probably by the same hand: and fragments of three Chronicles of English History, 1285 to 1307.

In the 4th volume is a Chronicle of English History, 1259 to 1296: Annals of Edward II., 1307 to 1323, by John de Trokelowe, a monk of St. Albans, and a continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henry de Blaneforde: a full Chronicle of English History, 1392 to 1406; and an account of the Benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the 15th century.

The 5th, 6th, and 7th volumes contain a history of the Abbots of St. Albans, 793 to 1411, mainly compiled by Thomas Walsingham: with a Continuation.

The 8th and 9th volumes, in continuation of the Annals, contain a Chronicle, probably by John Amundesham, a monk of St. Albans.

The 10th and 11th volumes relate especially to the acts and proceedings of Abbots Whethamstede, Albon, and Wallingford.

The 12th volume contains a compendious History of England to the reign of Henry V., and of Normandy in early times, also by Thomas Walsingham, and dedicated to Henry V.

29. Chronicon Abbatiæ Eveshamensis, Auctoribus Dominico Priore Eveshamiæ et Thoma de Marleberge Abbate, a Fundatione ad Annum 1213, una cum Continuatione ad Annum 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. Macray, Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.

The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery from about 690 to 1418. Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history.

30. Ricardi de Cirencestria Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Angliæ. Vol. I., 447–871. Vol. II., 872–1066. Edited by John E. B. Mayor, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863–1869.

Richard of Cirencester's history, in four books, extends from 447 to 1066. It gives many charters in favour of Westminster Abbey, and a very full account of the lives and miracles of the saints, especially of Edward the Confessor, whose reign occupies the fourth book. A treatise on the Coronation, by William of Sudbury, a monk of Westminster, fills book ii. c. 3.

31. Year Books of the Reign of Edward the First. Years 20–21, 21–22, 30–31, 32–33, and 33–35 Edw. I; and 11–12 Edw. III. Edited and translated by Alfred John Horwood, Barrister-at-Law. Years 12–13, 13–14, 14, 14–15, and 15, Edward III. Edited and translated by Luke Owen Pike, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1863–1891.

The "Year Books" are the earliest of our Law Reports. They contain matter not only of practical utility to lawyers in the present day, but also illustrative of almost every branch of history, while for certain philological purposes they hold a position absolutely unique.

32. Narratives of the Expulsion of the English from Normandy, 1449–1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normendie, par Berry, Hérault dû Roy: Conferences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A. 1863.

33. Historia et Cartularium Monasterii S. Petri Gloucestriæ. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. Hart, F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863–1867.

34. Alexandri Neckam de Naturis Rerum libri duo; with Neckam's Poem, De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ. Edited by Thomas Wright, M.A. 1863.

In the De Naturis Rerum are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws much light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth century.

35. Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft of Early England; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. Oswald Cockayne, M.A. 1864–1866.

36. Annales Monastici. Vol. I.:—Annales de Margan, 1066–1232; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066–1263; Annales de Burton, 1004–1263. Vol. II.:—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519–1277; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1–1291. Vol. III.:—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1–1297. Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia, 1042–1432. Vol. IV.:—Annales Monasterii de Oseneia, 1016–1347; Chronicon vulgo dictum Chronicon Thomæ Wykes, 1066–1289; Annales Prioratus de Wigornia, 1–1377. Vol. V.:—Index and Glossary. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registrary of the University, Cambridge. 1864–1869.

The present collection embraces chronicles compiled in religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are ten in number. The extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432.

37. Magna Vita S. Hugonis Episcopi Lincolniensis. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work is valuable, not only as a biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic but as the work of a man, who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs.

38. Chronicles and Memorials of the Reign of Richard the First. Vol. I.:—Itinerarium Peregrinorum et Gesta Regis Ricardi. Vol. II.:—Epistolæ Cantuarienses; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury; 1187 to 1199. Edited by the Rev. William Stubbs, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864–1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London.

In letters in Vol. II., written between 1187 and 1199, had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury.

39. Recueil des Croniques et anchiennes Istories de la Grant Bretaigne a present nomme Engleterre, par Jehan de Waurin. Vol. I. Albina to 688. Vol. II., 1399–1422. Vol. III., 1422–1431. Edited by William Hardy, F.S.A. 1864–1879. Vol. IV., 1431–1447. Vol. V., 1447–1471. Edited by Sir William Hardy, F.S.A., and Edward L. C. P. Hardy, F.S.A. 1884–1891.

40. A Collection of the Chronicles and ancient Histories of Great Britain, now called England, by John de Waurin. Vol. I., Albina to 668. Vol. II., 1399–1422. Vol. III., 1422–1431. (Translations of the preceding Vols. I., II., and III.) Edited and translated by Sir William Hardy, F.S.A., and Edward L. C. P. Hardy, F.S.A. 1864–1891.

41. Polychronicon Ranulphi Higden, with Trevisa's Translation. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge Vols. III.–IX. Edited by the Rev. Joseph Rawson Lumby, D.D., Norrisian Professor of Divinity, Vicar of St. Edward's, Fellow of St. Catharine's College, and late Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. 1865–1886.

This chronicle begins with the creation, and is brought down to the reign of Edward III. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth.

42. Le Livere de Reis de Brittanie e Le Livere de Reis de Engletere. Edited by the Rev. John Glover, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treaties are valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians. Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonised French.

43. Chronica Monasterii de Melsa ab anno 1150 usque ad annum 1406. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by Edward Augustus Bond, Assistant Keeper of Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866–1868.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country.

44. Matthæ Parisiensis Historia Anglorum, sive, ut vulgo dicitur, Historia Minor. Vols. I., II., and III. 1067–1253. Edited by Sir Frederick Madden, K.H., Keeper of the Manuscript Department of British Museum. 1866–1869.

45. Liber Monasterii de Hyda: a Chronicle and Chartulary of Hyde Abbey, Winchester, 455–1023. Edited by Edward Edwards. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde Chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify the statements, which, in substance, he adopts.

There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and mediæval English.

46. CHRONICON SCOTORUM: A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, from the earliest times to 1135; and SUPPLEMENT, containing the Events from 1141 to 1150. Edited, with Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, M.R.I.A. 1866.

47. THE CHRONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, M.A. 1866–1868.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first, is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum;" in the second, a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, to the death of Henry III.; in the third, a history of the reign of Edward I. The language is a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. THE WAR OF THE GAEDHIL WITH THE GAILL, or THE INVASIONS OF IRELAND BY THE DANES AND OTHER NORSEMEN. Edited, with a Translation, by the Rev. JAMES HENTHORN TODD, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an ancient original. The story is told after the manner of the Scandinavian Sagas.

49. GESTA REGIS HENRICI SECUNDI BENEDICTI ABBATIS. CHRONICLE OF THE REIGNS OF HENRY II. AND RICHARD I., 1169–1192, known under the name of BENEDICT OF PETERBOROUGH. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

50. MUNIMENTA ACADEMICA, OR, DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ACADEMICAL LIFE AND STUDIES AT OXFORD (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. HENRY ANSTEY, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

51. CHRONICA MAGISTRI ROGERI DE HOUEDENE. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by the Rev. WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1868–1871.

The earlier portion, extending from 732 to 1148, appears to be a copy of a compilation made in Northumbria about 1161, to which Hoveden added little. From 1148 to 1169—a very valuable portion of this work—the matter is derived from another source, to which Hoveden appears to have supplied little. From 1170 to 1192 is the portion which corresponds to some extent with the Chronicle known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough (see No. 49). From 1192 to 1201 may be said to be wholly Hoveden's work.

52. WILLELMI MALMESBIRIENSIS MONACHI DE GESTIS PONTIFICUM ANGLORUM LIBRI QUINQUE. Edited by N. E. S. A. HAMILTON, of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1870.

WORKS PUBLISHED IN PHOTOZINCOGRAPHY.

DOMESDAY BOOK, or the GREAT SURVEY OF ENGLAND OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, 1086; fac-simile of the Part relating to each county, separately (with a few exceptions of double counties). Photozincographed at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, by Colonel Sir HENRY JAMES, R.E., F.R.S., &c., DIRECTOR-GENERAL of the ORDNANCE SURVEY, under the Superintendence of W. BASEVI SANDERS, an Assistant Record Keeper. 35 Parts, imperial quarto and demy quarto (1861–1863), boards.

Domesday Survey is in two parts or volumes. The first in folio, contains the counties of Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester, and Lancaster, Cornwall, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Herts, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester and Rutland, Lincoln, Middlesex, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, Worcester, and York. The second volume, in quarto, contains the counties of Essex, Norfolk and Suffolk.

Domesday Book was printed verbatim et literatim during the last century, in consequence of an address of the House of Lords to King George III. in 1767. It was not, however, commenced until 1773, and was completed early in 1783. In 1860, Her Majesty's Government with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, determined to apply the art of photozincography to the production of a fac-simile of Domesday Book.

FAC-SIMILES OF NATIONAL MANUSCRIPTS, from WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR to QUEEN ANNE, selected under the direction of the Master of the Rolls and Photozincographed, by Command of Her Majesty, by Colonel Sir HENRY JAMES, R.E., F.R.S., DIRECTOR-GENERAL of the ORDNANCE SURVEY, and edited by W. BASEVI SANDERS, an Assistant Record Keeper. Price, each Part, with translations and notes, double foolscap folio, 16*s*.

Part I. (William the Conqueror to Henry VII.). 1865. (Out of print.)

Part II. (Henry VII. and Edward VI.). 1866.

Part III. (Mary and Elizabeth). 1867.

Part IV. (James I. to Anne). 1868.

The first Part extends from William the Conqueror to Henry VII., and contains autographs of the kings of England, as well as of many other illustrious personages famous in history, and some interesting charters, letters patent, and state papers. The second Part for the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., consists principally of holograph letters, and autographs of kings, princes, statesmen, and other persons of great historical interest, who lived during those reigns. The third Part contains similar documents for the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, including a signed bill of Lady Jane Grey. The fourth Part concludes the series, and comprises a number of documents taken from the originals belonging to the Constable of the Tower of London; also several records illustrative of the Gunpowder Plot, and a woodcut containing portraits of Mary Queen of Scots and James VI., circulated by their adherents in England, 1580–3.

Fac-similes of Anglo-Saxon Manuscripts. Photozincographed, by Command of Her Majesty, upon the recommendation of the Master of the Rolls, by the Director-General of the Ordnance Survey, Lieut-General J. Cameron, R.E., C.B., F.R.S., and edited by W. Basevi Sanders, an Assistant Record Keeper. Part I. Price 2*l.* 10*s.*

The Anglo-Saxon MSS. represented in this volume from the earlier portions of the collection of archives belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, and consist of a series of 25 charters, deeds, and wills, commencing with a record of proceedings at the first Synodal Council of Clovestho in 742, and terminating with the first part of a tripartite chirograph of the sixth year of the reign of Edward the Confessor.

Fac-similes of Anglo-Saxon Manuscripts. Photozincographed, by Command of Her Majesty, upon the recommendation of the Master of the Rolls, by the Director-General of the Ordnance Survey, Major-General A. Cooke, R.E., C.B., and collected and edited by W. Basevi Sanders. an Assistant Record Keeper. Part II. Price 3*l.* 10*s.*

(Also, separately. Edward the Confessor's Charter. Price 2*s.*)

The originals of the Fac-similes contained in this volume belong to the Deans and Chapters of Westminster, Exeter, Wells, Winchester, and Worcester; the Marquis of Bath, the Earl of Ilchester, Winchester College, Her Majesty's Public Record Office, Bodleian Library, Somersetshire Archæological and National History Society's Museum in Taunton Castle, and William Salt Library at Stafford. They consist of charters and other documents granted by, or during the reigns of, Baldred, Æthelred, Offa, and Burgred, Kings of Mercia; Uhtred of the Huiccas, Ceadwalla and Ini of Wessex; Æthelwulf, Eadward the Elder, Æthelstan, Eadmund the First, Eadred, Eadwig, Eadgar, Eadward the Second, Æthelred the Second, Cnut, Eadward the Confessor, and William the Conqueror, embracing altogether a period of nearly four hundred years.

Fac-similes of Anglo-Saxon Manuscripts. Photozincographed, by Command of Her Majesty, upon the recommendation of the Master of the Rolls, by the Director-General of the Ordnance Survey, Colonel R. H. Stotherd, R.E., C.B., and collected and edited by W. Basevi Sanders, an Assistant Keeper of Her Majesty's Records. Part III. Price 6*l.* 6*s.*

This volume contains fac-similes of the Ashburnham collection of Anglo-Saxon Charters, &c., including King Alfred's Will. The MSS. represented in it, range from A.D. 697 to A.D. 1161, being charters, wills, deeds, and reports of Synodal transactions during the reigns of Kings Wihtred of Kent, Offa, Eardwulf, Coenwulf, Cuthred, Beornwulf, Æthelwulf, Ælfred, Eadward the Elder, Eadmund, Eadred, Queen Eadgifu, and Kings Eadgar, Æthelred the Second, Cnut, Henry the First and Henry the Second. In addition to these are two belonging to the Marquis of Anglesey, one of them being the Foundation Charter of Burton Abbey by Æthelred the Second with the testament of its great benefactor Wulfric.

This work forms a comprehensive Palæographic Series for Ireland. It furnishes characteristic specimens of the documents which have come down from each of the classes which, in past ages, formed principal elements in the population of Ireland, or exercised an influence in her affairs. With these reproductions are combined fac-similes of writings connected with eminent personages or transactions of importance in the annals of the country to the early part of the eighteenth century.

The specimens have been reproduced as nearly as possible in accordance with the originals, in dimensions, colouring, and general appearance. Characteristic examples of styles of writing and caligraphic ornamentation are, so far as practicable, associated with subjects of historic and linguistic interest. Descriptions of the various manuscripts are given by the Editor in the Introduction. The contents of the specimens are fully elucidated and printed in the original languages, opposite to the Fac-similes—line for line—without contractions—thus facilitating reference and aiding effectively those interested in palæographic studies.

In the work are also printed in full, for the first time, many original and important historical documents.

Part I. commences with the earliest Irish MSS. extant.

Part II.: From the Twelfth Century to A.D. 1299.

Part III.: From A.D. 1300 to end of reign of Henry VIII.

Part IV. 1.: From reign of Edward VI. to that of James I.

In Part IV. 2.—the work is carried down to the early part of the eighteenth century, with Index to the entire publication.
